A Co-operative Approach to Improvement of Teachers in Service

KENNETH L. HEATON

School of Education, Northwestern University; and in charge of Workshop Advisory Service of the Commission on Teacher Education, American Council on Education

During the past five years there has grown up a type of professional education, designed for experienced teachers, counselors, and school administrators to which has been applied the name "workshops for teachers." Such programs have been sponsored by leading graduate schools of education throughout the country in co-operation with the Committee on Workshops. Much has been said and written during the past three or four years about the significance of this movement for the total program of teacher-education institutions.¹ More recently attention is being directed to the possible implications for the school administrator who has local responsibility for the improvement of instruction and for the professional growth of his own teachers. Many such statements as the following have been received from principals and superintendents who have had groups of teachers in workshops or who have themselves been among the hundreds who have participated:

There one finds a spirit of friendliness, of industry and of co-operation. No trace can be found of the stilted, formal and traditional classroom atmosphere that is frequently very deadening. In a business-like manner each member of the group proceeds with the development and solution of his own particular problem which he has selected and which has been approved by his faculty advisor. He may work with a group which has selected the same problem or alone as he desires. He is at liberty to seek assistance wherever it may be found—in the library, of his instructor, of members of his own or other related groups with the following results: he learns, frequently for the first time, (1) how to use more effectively the tools of learning which are placed at his disposal, drawing from available sources at his command, and not to be content with what one text or author has to say about a given subject; (2) how to plan and organize his work and materials more effectively; (3) how to present his findings to other members of the group which gives him the classroom situation in which he will ultimately find himself, and (4) how to develop a technique of teaching that will do away with formalism in the classroom and provide for his pupils a life situation and experiences from which more can be gotten.

Other administrators have commented as follows:

Last summer our Board spent eighteen hundred dollars to help

send a group of teachers to workshops. It was the best investment in supervision we have ever made. When we sent our teachers to workshops, we got practically a new curriculum out of it, and a new leaven which has transformed the spirit and morale of our staff.

Still others have said:

These workshop patterns seem to present the best way thus far discovered to combine the resources of the in-service and pre-service agencies of teacher education. The school system may, without merging its identity or surrendering its autonomy, join with an institution of higher learning in a workshop project.

In view of the growing interest on the part of school administrators it would seem in order to devote the following paragraphs to a discussion of two questions: (1) What has been the effect of workshop participation upon local teachers and local schools? (2) What type of relationships between local schools and teacher education institutions might result from the extension of this type of professional education?

What has been the effect of workshop participation upon local teachers and local schools?—Workshops do not represent a uniform program nor do they represent a new departure in educational theory. Throughout the ages there have been educators who emphasized the importance of real "problems" or "interests" as the basis for learning. There have been many efforts to build educational programs around the idea of "something to be done" (around some problem which must be solved, some situation which must be met, or some interest which will continue on after the period of study). The workshop represents an effort to utilize the most effective combination of educational methods and the combined faculty resources, library and laboratory resources, and other resources of the university, in such a way as to aid each teacher who comes to the university with a professional problem on which he needs assistance.

Although problems arise continually in typical school situations, the pressure of regular duties all too often makes it difficult if not impossible for teachers and administrators to make an adequate study of such problems while their schools are in session. On the other hand, university faculty members who have significant contributions to make to the professional problems of teachers in service are often prevented from doing so because they are busy teaching classes and performing other duties which limit their ability to deal with the individual problems which experienced teachers bring to them. The workshop has provided opportunity for the public school teacher and the university professor to be freed for "work" together, or for what Karl Mannheim calls "situational thinking."

The projects which have been brought to workshops have involved every major area of study and professional work. Some teachers come to clarify their thinking on problems of educational philosophy or to secure assistance in defining educational objectives. Some come to develop specific curriculum materials or to lay out a basic plan for the complete reorganization of the curriculum of their school. Others come to familiarize themselves with the findings of research in adolescent psychology and with the findings of other important aspects of educational research. Many develop tests and other instruments of evaluation. The teacher or counselor may come to work on problems of guidance, while the administrator may come to study his administrative responsibilities in relation to a better understanding of the learning process or to the practical implications of democratic ideals. Frequently a group of teachers from the same school system come to work as a committee on some problem of current importance to their school.

In an increasing number of instances a teacher (or committee of teachers) comes as a representative of his school rather than as an individual. By this it is meant that he brings with him a problem which has arisen from the thinking and planning of a group of teachers in his school or school district back home. For this reason, he has more than a personal interest in the problem to be studied; he has the assurance that other teachers will be interested in the results of his labors. Thus the workshop becomes a part of a year-around program for the promotion of the professional growth of teachers in service.

During the past twelve months an effort has been made to find out what tangible results could be traced to these summer experiences and which would indicate the possible importance of the program for local schools. Various schemes for evaluation have been set up in individual workshop groups. Correspondence from workshop participants, and conferences with both participants and those associated with them in their local schools, have been encouraged by the Committee on Workshops. Staff members in various workshops have visited participants in the field to work with them and to observe their progress. A systematic follow-up study of two hundred participants of the workshops of 1939 was made during the school year 1939-40, including observation of teaching, individual conferences concerned with the actual changes in practice of which the teacher was conscious, and conferences with fellow teachers and administrators to find out whether they had observed changes in the teacher which might be traceable to experience in the workshop.²

From these several sources have come evidence to support such statements as the following:

1. The vast majority of those who participated in workshops have during the year or years since such participation made significant changes in their program of teaching, including such changes as have involved fundamental reorganization of the program of instruction.
2. Certain educational concepts which had previously seemed sound in theory but which had not been adopted in practice because of apparent impracticability (the concept of a curriculum based on needs of children, the substitution of scientific methods for the selection of educational objectives for "swivel-chair" methods, use of evaluation techniques related to objectives other than growth in subject-matter learnings, etc.) have actually begun to operate.

3. Large numbers of these teachers have found they were using a greater variety of source materials (a variety of books, magazines, motion pictures, radio, etc.) and a larger diversity of learning activities (including individually planned investigations related to the pupil's own problems, field trips and excursions, activities involving expression in art or drama, etc.).
4. Great progress has been made in the efforts of teachers to provide pupils with experiences in democratic ways of living, in the development of social sensitivity, and in the development of effective self-direction on the part of pupils.
5. Teachers have taken more active part in the activities of faculty groups organized to work on the educational problems of the school as a whole, have found greater satisfaction in their work, have gotten along better with fellow teachers, have developed a new interest in community life, and have found their personal-social life more satisfying.

These are the types of outcomes which have seemed significant to the principal, supervisor, and superintendent. These seem to argue for a further extension of this type of professional education. These administrators have not only suggested that extension would be desirable but have also made suggestions as to the type of relationship which they think might be encouraged.

What type of relationships between local schools and teacher education institutions might result from the extension of this type of professional education?—It is the consensus that the rapid growth in enrollment since the humble beginning of workshops in 1936 represents growth in strength but it might also threaten weakness if it should lead to worship of a name or to the development of a standardized program. If the original ideal can be maintained, however—to provide a favorable setting into which a teacher in service may bring a professional problem and in which he may co-operate with capable staff members in planning a program of experiences which will help toward the solution of the problem and, at the same time, prepare the teacher to more effectively meet other problems in the future—then the movement will continue to gain in its significance. Thus will it continue to provide a basis for effective unification of “the resources of the in-service and pre-service agencies of teacher education.”

Many are beginning to see the values of this closer relationship of “pre-service” and “in-service” agencies as most capable of realization if the relationship is established on a twelve-months’ basis. In this relationship they see university faculty members contributing as advisors to groups of teachers throughout the months from September to June as well as in the summer period. The summer workshop will represent an intensification of a relationship which will be continuous throughout the year. In this relationship the local school district will, during the months of the school year, receive much helpful advice on the on-going program of the school. Problems suitable for more intensive consideration in workshops will be classified and initial steps toward their solution taken before summer arrives. Teachers will be ready to make more profitable use of their summer in the workshop setting because of the participation of the university's representative in the planning of the summer program and because at least one member of the workshop staff will be somewhat familiar with the situation from which the teacher comes to the workshop. Thus will the school district begin to include the university as one of the active contributors to its on-going program, and will look upon the workshop as an extension of its own continuous program of teacher growth and school improvement.

The values of such a relationship would most certainly not accrue only to the local school district. Faculty members in schools of education have always felt the need for close and continuous association with the public school field if they are to be effective in their service as teachers of teachers. The satisfactions which come to the teacher of teachers who works with public school faculty groups on real problems and over an extended period of time are to be preferred above those which result from assignment of duties which deny such association with reality. The workshop and associated activities provide the setting for such contacts.

The writer walked into the office of a professor of education recently—one who last summer, for the first time, had served as staff member in a workshop. He said, "There is hardly a day passes that I do not hear from one of my workshop advisees—they write to me for advice, send copies of materials they have prepared, and seem to want to keep active the relationship of last summer. This has never happened to me before." This experience was of particular interest because the writer had also in recent days talked with a secondary-school teacher who said, "I received all my professional preparation from ——— University but I never knew until this summer how much help they could be to me as a teacher."

The Pennsylvania Workshop

MARY JANE WYLAND

School of Education, Pennsylvania State College, and Director of The Pennsylvania Summer Workshop in Secondary Education, a project of the Pennsylvania Branch of the National Association of Secondary-School Principals in co-operation with the National Committee on Workshops of the Progressive Education Association and The Pennsylvania State Department of Public Instruction

A satisfactory record of achievement, touching on many fronts of secondary education, has been handed down by the Pennsylvania Workshop in Secondary Education which was in session from July 1 to August 9, 1940, at The Pennsylvania State College. The central purpose of the workshop was to design distinctive and practical procedures for teaching the "non-academic" pupil—the one who is not going on to college, or is educationally unadjusted.

Among the one hundred fifteen teachers and supervisors enrolled in the workshop were at least eight groups who were working out changes to benefit non-academic pupils in their own school districts. Pittsburgh was represented by twelve teachers; Tulsa, Oklahoma, by seven; Washington, Pennsylvania, by six; Los Angeles, Denver, by one each; Newton, Massachusetts, by two; Chester, Pennsylvania, by four; and the Philadelphia suburban schools by thirty-six.

The workshop, which was sponsored by the Pennsylvania branch of the National Association of Secondary-School Principals, with financial support from the National Committee on Workshops of the Progressive Education Association, was distinctive in at least four respects:

1. The co-operative supervision of the project by The Pennsylvania State College, the University of Pennsylvania, and the University of Pittsburgh. Academic credit was available through any one of the three institutions.
2. The flexibility of the procedure, an example of which was seen in the lengthy consideration given to the role of the schools in national defense matters.
3. The theme itself. This was the first workshop in the nation to concern itself with the non-academic pupil.
4. The number of nationally known authorities from both educational and service agencies and the business world who spent from one to three days in the workshop as visiting consultants.

The visiting consultants were:

Dr. Kenneth L. Heaton, Executive Secretary, Co-operative Bureau for Educational Research, Lansing, Michigan

Dr. V. T. Thayer, Director, Ethical Culture Schools, New York, New York

Dr. Kenneth Holland, National Youth Commission, Washington, D. C.

- Dr. F. E. Spaulding, School of Education, Harvard University
 Dr. Mary Hayes, Division of Placement, N.Y.A., Washington, D. C.
 Dr. G. L. Maxwell, Educational Policies Commission, Washington, D. C.
 Dr. Ralph Hetzel, Jr., C.I.O., 1106 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C.
 Mr. Paul Mertz, Director of Personnel, Sears, Roebuck & Company, Chicago, Illinois
 Mr. Howard Bell, American Youth Commission, Washington, D. C.
 Mr. J. Walter Dietz, Western Electric Company, 195 Broadway, New York, New York
 Miss Beatrice McConnell, Director, Industrial Division, Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C.
 Mr. Spencer Miller, Jr., Workers' Education Bureau, 1440 Broadway, New York, New York
 Mr. R. T. Little, Principal, Ellerbe Schools, Ellerbe, North Carolina
 Dr. Raymond Kistler, President, Beaver College, Jenkintown, Pennsylvania
 Dr. Harold Benjamin, Dean, School of Education, University of Maryland, College Park, Maryland

Conducted in an informal atmosphere, which allowed maximum freedom for each person to follow his own interests, the workshop had its headquarters on the third floor of the new central unit of Penn State's Liberal Arts Building. A sizable library dealing with non-academic courses and studies of non-academic pupils was available, and representatives of the National Association of Secondary-School Principals and the Progressive Education Association were present to observe and advise.

The progressive education theory of faculty and students planning and working together was carried out in all phases of the workshop. There were no formal classes, fixed lecture periods, or compulsory assignments. Students participated in the projects that most attracted them.

THE WORKING PROGRAM

Because of the nature of the Pennsylvania Workshop, participants were urged to come with definite problems upon which they wished to work during the summer. The first step, therefore, was to form groups of people with similar problems; and as a result of this organization, the following working groups were formed each under the staff member listed:

Administration	T. H. Broad
Arts in General Education	William Vitarelli
Education for Family Living	Ivol Spafford
Science for Non-College	R. D. Matthews
Industrial Arts	John Friese
Social Studies	Donald McNassor
English	Fletcher Collins
Mathematics	Walter E. Hess

Washington High School and the Pittsburgh Groups for Non-College..... W. W. D. Sones
 Guidance..... Merle Elliott

In addition to the special interest groups, there were also three groupings according to location: the central, the eastern, and the western Pennsylvania groups which met under the leadership of Miss Wyland, and Messrs. Matthews and Sones respectively. In general, each group met with its advisor every day and supplemented this general meeting with individual conferences, readings, and smaller group discussions.

Descriptions of the work carried out by the following groups will give an idea of the procedure of the workshop:

THE ENGLISH GROUP

The work of the English group resulted in committee reports on the following: The general objectives for the teaching of English; a summary of the group discussions; and a report called "Please Read," which was a summary of the group's point of view on the teaching of reading.

Also growing out of these meetings of the group were three enterprises which were of immediate significance to the entire workshop: (1) Pointing Up, a 24-page booklet which recorded the informal life of the workshop; (2) the composition and production of Snow White or the Twelve Apostles, an allegorical play of life at the workshop, and (3) Books Boys and Girls Like, an annotated 23-page list of books suitable for non-college readers.

THE GUIDANCE GROUP

In addition to general discussions of the place of guidance in the school program, the sub-committees worked on the problems of: Junior Placement; Home-Room Objectives; In-Service Training of Teachers; Adolescent Development; Guidance Organization and Techniques, and Evaluation of Outcomes.

GROUP ON EDUCATION FOR FAMILY LIVING

The home economics group in its general discussion meetings gave special attention to the values being sought in the reorganization of secondary education and to ways in which home economics teachers and the educational experiences in home economics can best contribute to the development of an enriched and more functional program of education.

Topics discussed included extending the values within home economics experiences to all pupils, the special interests of boys, home economics as a medium for personality development and guidance, teacher-pupil planning, individualizing instruction, pre-testing, and evaluation of growth. The need to base an educational program on the needs and interests of those being served and to draw on educational experiences within fields to meet these needs in contrast to a program that is planned in advance or set up in imitation of another situation was stressed throughout. Another topic given special consideration was the gainful employment aspects of home economics at the secondary level in contributing to the general employability of youth as well as in developing specific techniques needed in specific jobs.

The broadening and enriching of the home economics courses as offered, the co-ordinating of home economics teaching with that of other fields, ways of working in core groups in planning and teaching, and the promoting of home-life education throughout the school were seen as important aspects of the home economics teacher's work. The need to curtail in part her work as a so-called special teacher, where she already has a full load in order to reach further into the life of the school and to contribute her thinking to the reorganization of the entire program was given thoughtful consideration.

THE MATHEMATICS GROUP

The work of the mathematics group consisted of three interrelated activities—group and committee meetings, and individual conferences.

Group meetings were held to discuss the place and contributions of mathematics in general education and other subject fields. The chief concern was a type of mathematics related to everyday-life activities of the non-academic pupil. The traditional algebra, geometry, and trigonometry played a part in materials only insofar as they added to the simplification, understanding, and appreciation of the problem at hand.

The committee work consisted of developing content materials and instructional procedures and techniques that might be used by pupils in their mathematics classes the coming school year. Specific problems developed by the group were: (1) the development of tentative units in mathematics for senior high-school non-academic pupils; and (2) the development of tentative units in social mathematics for ninth-grade non-academic pupils.

GROUP ON OCCUPATIONAL PREPARATION

The members of this group attempted to keep three things in mind in their work: (1) to analyze all factors involved; (2) to study data and make a plan of attack on the problem; and (3) to make plans for evaluation when the plan has been put into operation. The interests of the group caused them to split into the following smaller groups:

1. Fused English and social studies for pupils in unit trade schools.
2. Fused "related science, mathematics, and drawing" for unit trade-school pupils in machine shop.
3. A realistic program of handwork and occupational training for pupils of a low level of general intelligence, as measured by present instruments.
4. A correlated program of English and industrial arts for pupils enrolled in courses in industrial arts which emphasize tryout for guidance as a chief aim.
5. Studies of vocational placement services and local vocational surveys for guidance.

THE SCIENCE GROUP

This group was interested in developing a more functional science program, particularly for the non-college pupil. Group activities consisted of discussion and critical analysis of the following questions: Who are the non-college pupils? What are the needs of the non-college pupils? How can science meet these needs? What teaching techniques seem to be most effective? After preliminary discussion, the group visited the demonstration school to observe the methods and procedures of Doctor Bingham of the Lincoln School, Columbia University, in pupil-teacher planning in general science.

Specific problems developed during the workshop were: orientation unit in ninth-grade general science, opportunities for vocational guidance in ninth-grade general science, senior science as determined by problems arising in the home, materials available for twelfth-grade consumer science, a functional course of study in biology for the non-college pupil, and a functional course in physical science for the non-college pupil in the upper secondary-school grades.

THE SOCIAL STUDIES GROUP

The social studies group, composed of seventeen teachers, devoted most of its first week to a clarification of the needs and problems of modern youth, particularly those not planning a college career. Concurrently with the general group discussions, there were developed four sub-groups based upon more specific problems of the different teachers in the group. These sub-groups considered plans, projects, reading materials, etc., which might be used by the teachers next year.

At the end of the first week, a reaction to the effect that some of the general discussions were rooted too much in generalities developed. It was felt by many members of the group that it might be profitable to spend time in talking with young people and securing their reactions to the plans which were being made. Accordingly the social studies group carried on a series of discussions with a group of State College High-School graduates and a group of CCC youths. The result was the creation of a major social studies group project which culminated in the co-operative preparation by the teachers and the youths of a report called A Workman Goes to Youth. During the last week and a half of the workshop, the general meetings of the social studies group were devoted to a critical consideration of the recommendations and materials of the four sub-groups.

THE PITTSBURGH GROUP

One type of project encouraged in the workshop was a local school problem. With this aim, twelve participants came from Pittsburgh with the special assignment to make a study of a group of slow learners enrolled in secondary schools of Pittsburgh. Seven hundred boys and girls between the ages of twelve and twenty were studied. Personal, social, and scholastic information was collected about these pupils, and inferences were drawn relative to their education.

The study dealt with the nature and characteristics of the "slow learner," the needs of these children as reflected by studies, and the possibilities and limitations of the school and the organization of instruction. The complete report of the work of this group can be obtained by writing to the Pittsburgh Board of Education.

THE WASHINGTON GROUP

A group of six teachers from Washington, Pennsylvania, and near-by districts brought data from their secondary school covering scholastic and after-school activities of the entering classes of 1932, 1933, and 1934. In addition, they brought personal and social data concerning the tenth-grade class for the coming school year. These data were analyzed and implications and recommendations developed as a result of this study.

The revealed facts suggest that preparation for adult living, for the large majority of the pupils in the Washington High School, should develop along the following lines: revolve around the pupils' development as a person, as a member of a family group, as an economic producer and consumer and as a citizen. The further recommendation was made that experimental groups from the prospective tenth grade should be formed and that the subjects of English, world history, and biology should be used as the instruments for an experimental general education program during the school year 1940-41.

THE OUTLOOK

Overwhelming sentiment for a continuation of the summer workshop idea in Pennsylvania was expressed by the teachers and principals enrolled in last summer's project.

In a questionnaire filled out at the close of the six-week session, ninety-six of the one hundred fifteen participants favored another workshop; and seventy-nine of these felt the theme again should deal with the "non-academic" pupil. Similarly, from their experience at The Pennsylvania State College, seventy-eight expressed the opinion that the workshop should continue on a large campus as against twenty-two who favored its being located on a small campus. While for many of the participants it was their first summer at Penn State, forty of them had previously attended summer session at State College.

One of the most significant measures of the group's enthusiasm was the evaluation put on the workshop by seventy-one enrollees who had recently attended regular summer sessions. All but four of them declared that workshop was definitely more valuable and helpful on their local school problems than the traditional summer sessions. This was largely due both to the close association among the enrollees themselves and also to the availability of staff members for consultation. The workshop seems to offer a pattern for graduate work that meets with enthusiastic response. From all quarters the hope is expressed that the idea can be expanded and continued.

The Peabody Curriculum Laboratory

JOHN E. BREWTON

Professor of Education, George Peabody College for Teachers

The Laboratory at George Peabody College for Teachers is a regional workshop. It was established in 1932 by the Division of Surveys and Field Studies to meet the needs of two state groups, Florida and Virginia, working at that time on the production of instructional materials on a state-wide basis. Through extensive teacher participation, these enterprises became state-wide programs for the in-service education of teachers. During the course of the past nine years, groups officially designated from eight states have worked intensively on problems of state-wide significance for periods of time varying from one to five consecutive summer quarters. These state groups, in the order of the initiation of their state-wide curriculum programs, have come from Florida, Virginia, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Kansas, Tennessee, and Oklahoma.

Since 1936, teacher-training groups from representative teachers' colleges in every state of the South have worked in the Laboratory each summer on some phase of the pre-service education of teachers. Other special interests have engaged groups of elementary teachers, of secondary-school teachers, of supervisors, and of junior college teachers and administrators of the region. In all, more than one thousand persons have worked in the Laboratory, using its facilities and services, and by their needs determining in some measure the direction of its development. In addition to the individuals benefited by direct experience in the workshop, thousands of teachers in the region have been reached indirectly through bulletins, handbooks, and study guides produced in the workshop and through experience in study groups in the several states.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LABORATORY

The physical design and the pattern of human relationships and activities which distinguish the Peabody Curriculum Laboratory came into being in 1932, as has been pointed out, in response to the specific needs of the two state groups from Florida and Virginia. Since that time only such changes have been made as new needs have demanded. The distinguishing features of the first curriculum laboratory at Peabody included: (1) a definite place to work in large groups, in small groups, and as individuals; (2) consultative service on general and special problems for groups and for individuals; (3) organized materials easily available, including courses of study, books on general and special instructional problems, and bibliographies; (4) editorial, secretarial, and typing services; (5) opportunities for exchange of ideas and development of fellowship; and (6) opportunities to evaluate the work done. The physical features of the permanent laboratory have come to include, therefore, work rooms, conference rooms, a library of valuable materials completely catalogued and available for general use, and typing facilities. A regular staff of general consultants intimately acquainted with the problems of the region are supplemented in the summer quarter by a staff of advisers experienced in the fields of elementary and secondary education. A staff of administrative assistants facilitates the functioning of various enterprises and activities of the working groups.

A study of the characteristics, practices, and opportunities of the Laboratory in August, 1939, revealed the following features:

1. Teachers may work as much as half of their time in regular courses on the campus, although the majority of the members of laboratory groups spend from three-fourths to all of their time in the Laboratory.
2. There are no formal classes in the Laboratory.
3. The program of each teacher and his group is based on needs.
4. The teacher works on a real problem that has significance for his own immediate situation, his state, or the region.
5. The teacher is a member of a large committee working on a local, state, or regional program. He is also a member of sub-committees working on special phases such as guidance and evaluation.
6. The interest of the group predominates, since groups consist of officially designated persons representing state or local systems of education.
7. Groups have advisers. Groups or individuals may consult any staff member. Conferences may be arranged with any member of the faculty of the College.
8. Recreation is individually determined, but the facilities are extensive. Opportunities for rich experiences in living are available, including participation in such special features as orchestra, dance, festivals, conferences, special entertainments, and organized field trips.
9. The Laboratory is a veritable work shop. Much of the conference and study results in creditable written productions which are either mimeographed or published for use in local, state, or regional enterprises.
10. The Laboratory, as a regional workshop, is an integral part of the College.

In summary, this regional workshop is, from one point of view, a place where an abundance of curriculum materials and conference and study space are provided for those interested in instructional problems; from another it is an institution deriving its nature from the specific needs and interests of groups of teachers concerned with the improvement of the quality of life in their own communities, states, or region; and from a third, it is a series of state teacher-education enterprises and consultative relationships.

MAJOR PROBLEMS

Three major problems have challenged the Peabody Curriculum Laboratory and its staff of consultants during the nine years of its history: (1) the in-service education of teachers through state-wide programs to improve instruction; (2) improved pre-service and in-service education of teachers through co-operative study of common problems of teacher education by leaders in teachers' colleges and state departments of education; and (3) improvement of the Southern region by a co-operative attack on some of the educational problems of the areas of greatest needs and inequalities of the region. The activities and emphases with respect to these problems have developed from the changes in leaders' awareness of needs resulting from intensive study of specific problems and from evaluation of the efforts of such activities in the several states.

In order to present in some detail the functioning of the Laboratory in meeting these problems, the activities of the first, middle, and immediate past years of its history are described briefly as a chronological cross section. In the descriptions certain aspects of the development of the Laboratory work are distinguishable: the continuity of development of state programs; the emergence of an emphasis on the problems of teacher-education institutions; and the intensive study of the problems of specific, small units in those states which have engaged in state-wide programs for the improvement of instruction. Throughout, the emphasis on serious study and on production of materials for use is noticeable.

The Year 1932 — The personnel of the first Laboratory was a group of seventeen Florida teachers under the leadership of a state director, eighteen Virginia teachers under the leadership of a state director, three graduate students in the field of the curriculum, two major, full-time consultants, one part-time consultant, one full-time secretary, and typists as needed. All members of the Peabody faculty were available for conference by request. Each group had come with a very real problem; each member of the groups with a definite responsibility to his group. When the work in the laboratory had been completed, the director of each group took back to his state materials to be used for the improvement of instruction.

For three years prior to 1932, the Florida State Department of Public Instruction had been engaged in a program to improve instruction by state-wide participation of the teachers of the state in study and the production of materials. The Florida group was closing the productive phase of this state-wide study by unifying and editing materials produced by three-hundred Florida teachers into courses of study for the elementary and secondary schools of the state. The Virginia group was beginning a three-year program of state-wide improvement of instruction by producing materials to be used in the initial stages of development by study groups throughout the state.

Florida produced for publication during this period: The Course of Study for Florida Elementary Schools; English Course of Study for Florida High Schools; Social Studies Course of Study for Florida High Schools; Commercial Course of Study for Florida High Schools; Foreign Language Course of Study for Florida High Schools. Virginia produced Procedures for Virginia State Curriculum Program.

The productive phase of the Florida program was followed by the induction of The Course of Study for Florida Elementary Schools, and the other courses then ready, into the schools of the state. Members of the staff of the Peabody Curriculum Laboratory assisted with the work of induction. In 1938, an officially designated group from Florida returned to the Laboratory to revise instructional materials in the social sciences and in science and to make plans for a renewed in-service program of teacher education state-wide in scope to be developed through state facilities.

The Virginia group, profiting by the experience of the Florida group, planned to give all of their materials a thorough try-out in the schools of their state and to revise them carefully before producing a course of study for the Virginia schools. To carry through this purpose, it was necessary for the Virginia groups to return to the Laboratory in 1933 to revise materials for further study and experimentation and in 1934 to edit materials for publication.

From the foregoing experiences three aspects of the Peabody Curriculum Laboratory are seen: (1) the efforts to assist in the development of continuous state programs to improve instruction; (2) the close relation between production committees and the school situations of their states; and (3) the trend to develop in the Laboratory, leaders to carry out further improvement in the in-service programs of their states by developing the necessary facilities in their states for this work.

The Year 1936 — By 1936, five states had officially designated state-production committees working in the Peabody Curriculum Laboratory on problems representing various levels of development. Membership in the Laboratory had risen from thirty-eight to one-hundred fifty-eight. A social philosophy of education exemplified by the major functions of social living, the concepts of areas of living, and the core curriculum engaged the attention of the groups. The techniques of democratic living were increasingly indistinguishable with the procedures of laboratory groups.

Publications produced in the Laboratory by state groups during this period were as follows: Arkansas, in the fourth year of a five-year program produced Tentative Course of Study for Elementary Schools and Teacher's Guide for Secondary Schools; Alabama, in the first year of its program, following initial state conferences and study in 1935, produced Study Bulletin for Teachers; Kansas, in the first year of a three-year program, produced Study Bulletin for Teachers and P. T. A. Bulletin; Mississippi, in the second year of a five-year program produced Bulletin for the Improvement of Instruction; and Tennessee, in the first of a five-year program produced Study Bulletin.

From time to time teachers and administrators from public schools and higher institutions are invited to come to George Peabody College to consider significant educational problems. In recent years a number of such conferences have centered around the improvement of instruction. During the summer quarter, 1936, the theme of the conference was "Implications for Teacher Education in New Curriculum Programs." Representatives from fifteen states participated in the discussion.

Following the conference a number of persons representing institutions of higher learning engaged in teacher education. State and county supervisory officers spent a month in the Curriculum Laboratory working intensively on the problems raised in the conference. The group had two purposes: (1) to clarify issues and problems, and (2) to suggest possible points of attack on these problems. Members of the group were in daily contact with selected groups of teachers working in the Laboratory on state and city curriculum problems.

The major problems of this teacher-training group were related to the implications of new curriculum programs for the improvement of instruction in teacher-education institutions and for the supervision and in-service education of teachers. This Regional Teacher-Training Group, the first of a five-year succession, produced Problems in Teacher Education, Volume I.

The emergence of the co-operative attack on the problems of the teacher-education institution as a phase of the program of the workshop is significant. It illustrates the dynamic quality of the workshop problems. It tends to verify the value of the conference techniques. It tends to utilize the leadership resources of a region in attacking common problems.

The Year 1940—By 1940, most of the state programs which had used the Laboratory in the production of courses of study and other instructional aids for state-wide use, had completed that phase of their program, and had developed enough leaders and strong curriculum centers within their own states to carry the kind of work done earlier in the Peabody Curriculum Laboratory. The Teacher-Training Seminar groups had explored major problems, issues, current practices, and had begun an intensive study of one of the neglected educational areas of the region—the rural schools.

The workshop of 1940 in contrast with the workshop of 1932 was characterized by a diversity of activities and enterprises. The state program to improve instruction continued, with one state completing a five-year program and a second state initiating, through selected leaders, a new state-wide program. Small groups officially designated from states that had worked for five and six years continuously on state-wide programs to improve instruction were in the workshop to work intensively on specific problems that had to be met if further progress in their programs was to be made. Total school facilities and co-operating groups from several states worked on problems. Fifteen individuals who were unaffiliated with groups worked on individual and diversified problems.

The Teacher-Training Seminar group intensified its study of the problems of the rural schools, trying to find things which teachers in the small one-, two-, and three-teacher schools might do to improve the quality of life in their schools and their communities.

The newest distinctive addition to the workshop was the Junior College group, thirty persons representing the junior colleges of Mississippi. The three major phases of the work of this group included: (1) a statement of basic principles; (2) an analysis of the needs and interests of pupils; and (3) a proposed reorganization of the curriculum. Their report, which has been printed, contains many suggestions for experimentation; focuses attention upon the student and his needs; proposes a simple and more useful organization of the curriculum; proposes definite next steps for the improvement of the work of each department; and contains the elements of a long-range program of improvement of the junior college.

The intensity of a summer workshop may be seen from some of the statistics of the 1940 Peabody Curriculum Laboratory. During the summer, with a membership of one hundred forty-one persons, approximately two hundred seventy-five conferences were scheduled with consultants, in addition to a great many unscheduled short conferences. There were over two hundred fifty group conferences scheduled in conference rooms. Consultants were present in more than one hundred twenty-five of these group conferences. In addition to the scheduled group conferences, there were numerous small group meetings in the Laboratory. Over one hundred seventy-five pieces of work were turned in for typing. Three-fourths of the materials were edited for distribution for use in local schools, states, or the region.

PROSPECT

Nine years of the George Peabody Curriculum Laboratory have proved the value to teachers and administrators of intensive co-operative work on real problems in their local situation, state, or region. Selected to come to the Laboratory to contribute to the solution of a problem, given an opportunity to work under the most favorable conditions, encouraged to utilize democratic procedures in the solution of their problems, teachers have responded brilliantly. The results of their work can be seen in their own improved professional attitudes, in the increased interest in professional problems in their states, and in the increasingly large number of centers established for professional study and community development within their own states.

On the whole, the teachers who have worked in the Laboratory have been experienced, educationally mature, and interested in a problem of significance to a specific educational system. The Laboratory has given them an opportunity to bring their education to bear upon the solution of a problem, challenging their creative ability and stimulating their resourcefulness. The opportunity to be of service in a real enterprise has stimulated further professional growth. It is doubtful whether immature teachers without an adequate background could produce well or grow commensurably in a workshop situation. As states study and curriculum centers and workshops increase and as the co-operating school movement grows within the states, the Peabody Curriculum Laboratory looks forward to increasing time for problems of a regional nature and for the intensive study by leaders within a region of common local problems.

The Denver Workshop

GUY FOX

Assistant Director of Instruction, Denver Public Schools, and Director of the Workshop

In the Denver situation the workshop has received favorable appraisal from an overwhelming percentage of those who have attended any of its three sessions—1938, 1939, and 1940. The Denver Public School System has benefited greatly from the stimulus, vision, and practical assistance it has given to Denver teachers and administrators. Therefore, we shall attempt to tell briefly the story of the 1940 Denver Summer Workshop in the hope that educators in other situations may find suggestions and encouragement.

We think that we can do this best by giving briefly (1) an account of the planning that was done in preparation for the 1940 workshop; (2) an account of a few of the major activities at the workshop; and (3) a glimpse of the evaluation data and judgments. Space will not permit a survey of some of the unsolved problems where we think that we can profit from experience.

PLANNING FOR THE WORKSHOP

Setting up basic plans—With the encouragement of the Committee on Workshops of the Progressive Education Association and the Commission on Teacher Education of the American Council on Education, the University of Denver and the Denver Public Schools early in December, 1939, agreed to a program for joint sponsorship of a summer workshop. Important elements in this agreement were as follows:

- A. Contributions to the workshop from the University
 - 1. Income from tuition and fees of students attending
 - 2. Services of one or two full-time staff members
 - 3. Consultation services from all staff members available at the time
 - 4. Arrangements for accrediting students enrolled in the workshop
- B. Contributions to the workshop from the Denver public schools
 - 1. Housing accommodations in one of the senior high-school buildings
 - 2. Clerical assistance
 - 3. Consultation services from available members of the administrative and supervisory personnel of the Denver Public Schools' staff
 - 4. Financial assistance through tuition aid to Denver teachers from elementary and secondary schools to the extent of approximately $1,800

It was agreed that it was highly desirable to have teachers from other school systems in attendance at the workshop and, therefore, the University was to be free to encourage their enrollment as University counselors might think wise. In accordance with this policy, the University publicized the workshop in its literature on summer school activities. But since it was expected that the majority of those in attendance would be from the local schools, the Denver Public Schools' staff began at once to plan toward making the Summer Workshop an integral part of its program for developing better curriculums and more capable teachers. Since it is likely that any school system may take advantage of a near-by workshop in much the same way, various phases of this planning will be described briefly.

Relating the summer workshop to the professional concerns of the school staff—A serious effort was made to involve as many members of the Denver school staff as possible in planning the workshop program. The Central Committees on Instruction, instruction committees in the buildings, and individual teachers were given responsibilities. These suggestions were elaborated in an announcement issued to principals and teachers on February 23. In this bulletin the activities of Building Instruction Committees were suggested as follows:

1. Under the leadership of the principal and with the co-operation of the entire faculty, consider the most important needs of the school community.

2. In like manner, select representatives to the workshop (who were to share in tuition aid) who are best qualified because of personal interests, experiences, and ability to do the work or to get the help desired. To the extent possible, teachers should be chosen who have a personal concern and responsibility in the school projects selected for study.

3. Plan for full utilization by the entire faculty of the benefits derived by its representatives at the workshop. (The same might well apply to the summer experiences of all staff members where they have contributions to make.)

4. Make recommendations to the Central Instruction Committees regarding the organization and program of the workshop.

Illustrations were given of types of problems that Building Instruction Committees might focus upon for workshop study. Three from the list of ten were: analysis of the specific needs of the pupils of the community served by the school, reorganization of the curriculum in terms of the school's objectives; elimination of less important activities; conservation of time for more important concerns, development in the rough of source units and other teacher materials.

Individual teachers were encouraged to participate in planning as follows: "If, either as an individual or as a member of a committee, a staff member is keenly interested in a professional problem or project that promises to contribute both to the school program and to his own professional growth, he should get in touch with one or more of the following individuals or groups and discuss the matter with them: the building principal, the building instruction committee, members of the city administrative and supervisory staff whose work is most closely related to the project in mind, and members of the Central Instruction Committee."

Some of the illustrations of individual problems that teachers might bring to the workshop were: How does a teacher take the pupil into partnership in the teaching-learning process? How may I make evaluation and guidance an integral part of my teaching? How may I live more successfully as an individual in our democratic society?

Assigning problems to building or school-group representatives in the workshop—This is a critical problem that has not been well solved in terms of democratic procedure. The following suggestions were approved by the Central Instruction Committees.

1. Problems assigned should not require the full time of teachers enrolled at the workshop. There should be time for supplementary activities that will contribute to teacher growth. Building or similar assignments probably should not require more than half the workshop time.

2. Assignments should allow for flexibility. They should be broad enough to permit those with similar problems to work together. Much is gained from the interchange of ideas thus made possible. Representatives should be given considerable discretion in the development and treatment of assignments.

3. The type of report or other contributions that should be brought back by building or group representatives should be discussed co-operatively within the building or school group in preparing for the workshop. Contributions should vary greatly in character in different situations and with different individuals. Furthermore, much should be left to the judgment of representatives. Groups at the workshop will give careful consideration to the problem of making their work helpful to their colleagues and to other teachers.

The workshop planning group—In January, the Central Instruction Committees authorized the appointment of a Workshop Advisory Committee to consist of one principal and one classroom teacher from each of the three school levels together with the Director of Instruction and the Director of the Workshop. This committee, together with the staff members from the Denver area, constituted the Workshop Planning Group.

This group held five meetings while school was still in session, three of them evening dinner meetings, to consider policies and program. In addition, there were several meetings or smaller groups on specific problems. Also, the staff met continuously throughout Friday and Saturday preceding the opening of the workshop. It was thought to be exceedingly important that the staff learn to think together and that the members come to know each other, professionally and individually, before the workshop began.

Orientation of prospective members—Teachers planning to attend the workshop were asked to fill out an application form. In this they were asked to furnish information regarding their present location and activities, the problems or interests which they wished to pursue at the workshop and leisure-time interests.

An orientation manual entitled: How to Recognize the Symptoms and Eliminate the Causes of "Workshopper's Confusion" was prepared and sent to applicants and staff the last of May. In it an attempt was made to summarize workshop philosophy and procedures. A number of questions that have bothered members of past workshops were raised and answered. In it were outlined in detail a suggested program of group meetings, conference periods, and planning procedures for the first week.

WHAT HAPPENED AT THE WORKSHOP

Who attended the workshop?—A wide variety of interests were present in the workshop. This representation included seventy-two teachers from elementary schools, fifty-seven from junior high schools, forty-three from senior high schools, and eight from other types of school situations. Of this group, one hundred sixty-one enjoyed their first workshop experience, thirteen had one year of previous workshop experience, and six had two years of previous workshop experience. Again, one hundred twenty-seven of these desired graduate credit, thirteen desired undergraduate credit, and forty audited the work.

Thirteen states were represented by the thirty-six members outside of the Denver schools; eleven from Colorado, five from Iowa, five from Missouri, three from Illinois, two each from Kansas, Michigan, and Washington, and one each from California, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nebraska, Oregon, and Utah. The staff members included twenty-three from the Denver public schools, two from the Denver community, and three from outside of Colorado. The total workshop membership including staff and students was two hundred eight.

The workshop schedule—The tabulation of problems stated on the application blanks seemed to indicate three broad groups or types: (1) problems relating to an understanding of general education and the general content, teaching methods and organization appropriate to it, (2) problems relating directly to subject fields and to various special interests such as: evaluation, home and school relationships, and the like, and (3) problems pertaining to guidance and personnel work. Therefore, in the orientation manual sent to applicants, the following outline which was followed with minor variations was suggested for a schedule:

General Schedule

Forenoon

|----------------|---|
| 8:00 to 10:00 | General education groups, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays |
| 8:00 to 10:00 | Subject and special interest groups, Tuesdays and Thursdays |
| 9:00 to 12:00 | Demonstration classes |
| 10:00 to 12:00 | Individual conferences with the possibility of school groups meeting Tuesdays and Thursdays |

Afternoon

- | | |
|---------------|---|
| 12:00 to 1:30 | Lunch and sociability |
| 1:30 to 3:00 | Groups studying guidance and personnel work |
| 3:00 to 4:30 | Recreation and special interests |

DESCRIPTIONS OF A FEW OF THE ACTIVITIES

General education groups—The workshop planning group in its pre-workshop planning decided to do something different in this area. It was felt that the greatest professional need of all was to experience the process of determining children's educational needs, of planning co-operatively the experiences that are most likely to help children meet those needs, of determining the possible contributions from specialized fields such as the arts and the sciences, and of planning evaluation procedures. Therefore, instead of organizing groups to study about such topics as: "The Philosophy of General Education," "Teaching Methods and Procedures in General Education," or the "Organization and Administration of General Education," it was decided to recommend to the membership that:

1. The whole workshop take a period to list as many as possible of the apparent needs of children at the various school levels.

2. A committee then group these needs into several broad areas important for curriculum planning and report their recommendations.

3. Members of the workshop interested in studying general education select one of these areas. Should a sufficient number select any one of these areas, they would be encouraged to organize a group to carry on whatever activities seemed most appropriate to them in the exploration of children's needs, curriculum content, teaching procedures, evaluation, or other phases of this area of a general education program.

The preceding steps were taken during the first week and the greater part of the workshop elected to form groups to explore the following areas:

1. Growing and learning as a person
2. Living with others in the home
3. Living with others in small, informal groups
4. Living with others in organized groups, such as communities
5. Conserving life and property
6. Earning a living
7. Using leisure time
8. Buying goods and services
9. Understanding and controlling our physical environment

Each group had one or more staff members to assist in planning and developing its program and each had complete freedom to plan the activities that promised to be most profitable to its membership. Students were encouraged to participate in the planning in an effort to see that their individual needs were provided for; however, if the plans made did not seem likely to meet their needs, they were to feel free to shift to another group. These groups met throughout the workshop, three days each week. On the last day of the workshop there was a general meeting of the general education groups and through skits, pictures, reports, and discussion the groups shared the highlights of their experiences.

A systematic evaluation of the general education groups in relation to other groups was not made. However, the following generalizations might safely be summarized from data in the questionnaire and from staff and student comment.

1. Most of the general education groups provided an excellent situation for teachers from all grade levels, for administrators, and other specialists to think and work together on the general education program.

2. Most teachers who participated in the groups felt that the experience was valuable. On the questionnaire, ninety-eight said they would recommend the same amount in next year's schedule; twelve would like to see more, and only eleven voted for less.

3. Some staff members and some students felt that there was too much duplication between the general education groups in the morning and the guidance groups in the afternoon. Another year there probably should be but one series of groups including both general areas and special interests. These might be determined during pre-workshop planning, staff leaders assigned in advance and much pre-planning might be done both by the staff leadership and by the teachers, who could enroll in advance in the group in which each is most interested.

Subject and special interest groups—Groups were organized around the following special interests: administration, the arts (general, fine, home, and industrial), construction or revision of courses and units, evaluation, health and recreation, language arts (including a small but active group of foreign language teachers), math-science, music, special problems in reading, school and home relationships, social studies.

These groups met regularly on Tuesdays and Thursdays and, in some cases, scheduled additional meetings. The group studying administration, for example, planned an intensive program for the middle three weeks of the workshop that included several meetings in combination with other groups, and two or three general meetings to which the others were invited.

Production of units and other materials—The production, by either individuals or groups, of finished materials for distribution has not been encouraged. It has been felt that emphasis upon such a policy in the brief period of five weeks would seriously jeopardize other more important values. Therefore, it has been expected that materials will be tentative and unpolished, useful primarily to those who produced them or who worked in the same situation. In duplicating materials the aim, in most cases, has been to meet only the need of the workshop members.

Individual conferences—An earnest attempt was made to keep the period from 10:00 to 12:00 A. M. free for individual conferences with staff members. This was achieved only to a fair degree. Committee meetings kept crowding in. Certain groups scheduled meetings in this period. But, generally speaking, this was conference period. Members of the workshop not in conference were free, of course, to visit demonstration classes, work in the library or arts studio, take advantage of recreational facilities, or engage in other activities—including going home.

Recreation program—Both gymnasiums were open at all times and varied opportunities were available for recreational activities. Among these were: several ping-pong tables, two badminton courts, one volley-ball court, two shuffle-board courts, and various types of apparatus. A lounge room was established on the balcony of one of the gymnasiums with a cooler of soft drinks available. Horseshoe courts were available on the grounds. Several parties were organized for horseback riding. Various tournaments were organized but the competitive spirit did not run very high.

The first week of the session most students and staff members filled out an intriguing questionnaire on needs relating to balanced living. The needs and desires expressed made demands quite beyond the possibilities of the organization; but many helpful program suggestions were obtained.

Sociability—In addition to the sociability of the lunch hour and the many spontaneous informal activities of the workshop, several special occasions were planned. At the close of the first day, punch and wafers were served in the gymnasium. A workshop picnic was held on Genessee

Mountain at the beginning of the second week. The third week an evening party of square dancing and other activities was held in the gymnasium. Then came the trip to the operetta at the historic mining camp of Central City. The final event was a dinner and program at Hillcrest Inn in the mountains. Such activities help to build the spirit of comradeship that seems to be characteristic of workshops.

EVALUATION OF THE WORKSHOP

It is not practicable in this article to summarize the data and opinions gathered in the evaluation of the workshop. It may be worth while, though, to list the several phases of the evaluation program that was carried on.

1. Beginning with the second week, each student working with a counselor was asked to fill out and turn in a form giving the week's record of activities and progress. This was more as an aid to counseling rather than evaluation. Then in the final week, each student desiring credit prepared a description of his workshop activities on a regular form which was signed by both student and staff counselor.

2. The major part of the final staff meeting was devoted to an oral evaluation of the workshop program and to suggestions for future programs.

3. On Wednesday of the last week, a group of about thirty representative students and staff members met for an oral discussion and evaluation of the workshop program.

4. The recommendation was made that the workshop groups take time to look back over their activities and to evaluate both the methods by which they had worked and the results obtained.

5. Each staff member was asked to make a report of evaluations and suggestions relating to his program.

6. An evaluation committee at the beginning of the workshop, following suggestions from Dr. Maurice Troyer of the Commission on Teacher Education, had developed a series of thirteen questions to guide students in an analysis of their workshop interests. Students were invited to write answers to these questions at the beginning of the workshop. During the last week they were asked to review their original statements and to indicate the changes they would then make in their answers, and the reasons for these changes.

7. Students were asked to fill out two questionnaires, one an evaluation of staff contributions and the other on workshop program and activities. These were unsigned.

A review of the extensive data gathered in the evaluation of the workshop leaves one with the feeling that something vital has taken place in the experiences of the large majority of the teachers. Opinions still differ on many issues. There is a spirit of frank criticism and a democratic readiness to make suggestions concerning the unsolved problems of the workshop. But through it all there is evidence of a strong tide of intelligent purpose and wholesome enthusiasm that affects most teachers deeply. In the 1939 Denver Workshop, ninety-six per cent of the teachers who had attended a regular summer school within the past five years stated that the workshop had been of more value.

Some of the comments from these teachers are indicative of the effect the workshop had on them. When commenting upon the informal activities in the workshop program the following statements were made by them: (1) "Continue as you did this year. The arts studio was my finest experience." (2) "Keep all of the activities. I intend to participate next time—our group was over busy." (3) "I need to learn to play; my whole life has been centered around work. This is an unfortunate mistake and I have missed much." When commenting on new experiences they stated: (1) "Finger painting, brush painting, and badminton. Felt the need of the experience. I found how a learner in new situations feels and I can be more sympathetic and try harder to help children facing the same difficulty." (2) "Almost every activity in which I took part had many, if not all, new elements in it. I tried them because there was encouragement from every source to do them without feelings of inferiority." (3) "The experience of being leisurely about school work, doing only what interested me and not having to account to anyone or any organization for what I've done. I've been re-created as a result." (4) "Have participated in group discussions to quite an extent. Speaking up rather than keeping quiet has helped me greatly." When commenting on what was of most value to them they stated: (1) "The idea of a curriculum based on pupil needs and interests with teacher-pupil planning." (2) "Absolute 'freedom of speech.' Unusual candor of all members in expressing honest criticism." (3) "Social contacts; seeing people accomplish so much without evidences of pressure or strain. Personal growth." (4) "I at last have an easier feeling about this idea of general education and how to attempt the teaching of it." (5) "New slants on teachers as a group. I feel the workshop really practiced what it preached." (6) "The feeling that democracy was really being put into force. Feeling that if you had something to say you could say it. Becoming acquainted with other school members, other than elementary, and discussing problems with them." (7) "Finding that I dare play without being self-conscious. Really getting to know some people." (8) "An intangible something—possibly it's inspiration."

The Denver Workshop fell short of its goals in many respects. Experience suggests many improvements. This should be expected, for the workshop is very young. Two or three questions are suggested for guidance in the future: Can we, in the workshop movement, define our objectives and set up the forms of organization, control, and evaluation in such a manner that we both increase our effectiveness and the competence of our teachers and at the same time preserve the priceless dynamic qualities of this movement? Can we become more and more successful in making democracy really function? Can we preserve the glow of purpose, friendliness, and enthusiasm that the workshop has kindled?

A Workshopper Evaluates

EDITH M. RIDEOUT

Teacher of English in the Newton High School, Newtonville, Massachusetts, and Student-Participant in the Summer Workshop of Harvard University

"A teacher is one who throws down a handful of keys," said the chapel speaker one hot morning this summer on the Harvard Campus.

Instantly I thought how applicable that metaphor is to describe a workshop as I was experiencing it in a summer when democratic ideals and principles seemed to be sinking into the bomb holes of blitzkriegs, and when dictators were annihilating freedom of thought. Yes, but it must be the mighty hand of a Goliath so many were the keys thrust our way if we had the zeal, the ingenuity, and the time to continue the search. In a day of catch phrases when we are speaking in terms of "streamlined age," a "changing world," "totalitarianism," and all the "isms," here was I on our oldest college campus in America, pursuing new fountains of inspiration in the most democratic fashion I had ever experienced. In the Phillips Brooks House, which was our center, members of the staff and the teacher-pupil together were trying to solve problems along many diversified lines, but all to increase our skills in helping the youth of today. To see and to experience the eagerness of these classroom instructors, to carry home new stimulation, to understand new movements, to do a better job certainly helped renew my faith in the teachers of our country.

"But it is all so vague to me," said a friend. "What is a workshop?" While another, with an innuendo chuckled, "So they have to label it a workshop to make people think you are working!"

To define such a process of education taxes one's ingenuity, for, in reality, one needs to experience the six stimulating weeks in one to discover why participants often refer to it as "An Intellectual Paradise." Or in less exalted terms I might quote a phrase from a famous Harvard Dean's wife, who was burlesquing her husband's speeches at one of our social gatherings: "Education should be made as alluring as sin." That was my experience this summer! There was no attempt at indoctrination or to mold teachers to certain patterns, but free discussions of all current trends.

In order, however, to satisfy the questions of my two friends, for there may be others who feel the same vagueness in regard to workshops and work done, let me elaborate. In a report from Dr. Howard Wilson, who was in charge of workshops at Harvard, he states: "The workshop plan is basically an attempt to meet the student of education on the ground of the immediate problems he is facing in his work, to bring the resources of a trained staff to bear on the problems, and to lead the teacher into a wider view of education by the solution of his problems rather than by an instructor's systematic overview of a given field." The staff had no preconceived plan to impose on the teachers, but each could work on his own.

The full workshop consisted of four sections: the Elementary, the Administrative, the Social Studies, and the English, of which I was a member. In the combined groups there were one hundred nineteen members, with a scheduled staff of sixteen, plus twenty-five others who were available. Among these were special consultants such as Dr. Peter Blos, Director of Guidance at Irvington House, Irvington, New York, who gave advice on guidance and psychology of adolescence; Dr. Phillip J. Roulon, of Harvard, on questions of tests and measurements; Dr. V. T. Thayer, Educational Director of Ethical Culture in New York City, on curriculum planning or administration. Often the entire group met for lectures on problems of interest to all participants. Too, we had several purely social gatherings where we became acquainted.

Each student presumably brought to the session some problem on which to work. Among some were these: re-organization of the English course of study; correlation of American history and American literature; development of an English course for the twelfth-grade non-academic pupil, and the completion of a survey of the outside reading; required course in English in Junior College, grade thirteen, with special attention to low-ability pupils; testing of comprehension of prose and poetry; construction of a teaching unit on the French Revolution; collecting and cataloguing descriptions of examples of superior practices and techniques of teaching; developing a unit on marriage and the family for use in grade twelve; preparation of a paper on The Teacher and the Civil Liberties; re-organization of United States history course in grade eleven for the Erie, Pennsylvania, schools.

My own problem I phrased as follows: how can we help our pupils going to college: better articulation and integration through better reading habits, better writing habits, and better study habits. This does not signify, however, that the number of failures is alarming, but investigation does show loss of time in the process of adjustment, discouragement, and low grades for high-capacity pupils. Frequently all this leads a pupil to leave college when he should not. There are all sorts of reasons, academic and personal, which I studied in the development of adolescence. If both the secondary schools and the colleges can keep alert to the needs of the pupils in these days of insecurity and help them in their readjustments, society will be benefited. P. M. Symonds in the Problems and Interests of Older Adolescents declares that this period of late adolescence is the most important of any periods of development and that it is the time of life (18 years to 22) when the individual is at the point of greatest educability. If we know the causes of confusion and the obstacles that retard our students, then, and only then, can we bridge the gap between the two systems of education and bring about better integration.

During the six weeks I made a start on this project, knowing full well that it had no limitations and could involve months and years of research. But that is just what I hope to do! I am not stopping with the cessation of last summer's courses. In my search for material, first I went to some of our own graduates from Newton High School; they seemed eager to help in every possible way. They spared neither secondary school nor college in their youthful, but so often clear-cut, analysis. Their comments, added to my own experience, formed the foundation of my summer course. These I had considered well before I took up residence on Harvard campus. With Mr. Louis C. Zahner, Head of the English Department of the Groton School and Lecturer in the Harvard Graduate School of Education, and Prof. Lou LaBrant, Ohio State University, to advise me, I read as widely as I could. Of course, as I expected, I found some of the following stumbling blocks: note taking, long-time assignments, inability to read a paragraph, attitudes of instructors, examinations, lack of vocabulary, lack of orderliness in written work, too little knowledge of grades in college, lecture form of class in college, poor methods of study, and many, many others. These I tried to group under my three spring boards of reading habits, writing habits, and study habits. In the first group especially I found so much material it would require a paper by itself.

This fall I have organized these findings into a questionnaire which I sent, with a letter, to about two hundred and fifty of our graduates of last June now in seventy-five different colleges. Although this was sent out only two weeks ago at this writing, I now have heard from about seventy per cent. And the answers are helpful; most of the boys and girls seemed much interested and offered more assistance. My next task will be to tabulate these findings—perhaps at Harvard next summer, if not before. I am sure we shall find much in these replies to guide us to greater efficiency in our school.

In answer to the insinuation of my second interrogator: Did we really work? Let me say that we did from early morning to late evening. For instance, one guidance group met at 8:30 in the morning and again at 7:30 at night—as well as in between. Because most of our time during the winter months is so routinized, perhaps one of the most satisfying aspects was the irregularity of many meetings, so that, although I spent long days in lectures, conferences, and study, I was stimulated and refreshed.

After our registration was completed on the first day, we had conferences with our consultants who recommended to us certain sources which would aid us in our research. Shortly we of the English workshop met to declare our problems so that we soon discovered the participants with whom we might work to best advantage. Hence, along with our reading and independent research, we had meetings of all the workshops where we heard lectures or panel discussions on such topics of interest as the unit, core curriculum, integration, guidance, basic English, and many others. Meetings of the English workshop were held sometimes over the lunch table at the Faculty Club or in our comfortable headquarters at the Phillips Brooks House. Small group meetings where we exchanged ideas, conversational exchanges, were held as we lunched or met to help each other, and meetings were held alone with our consultants to report progress and to plan future work. Speakers from the regular Harvard faculty were called in who were specialists in lines we were following; these were entirely unscheduled, but grew out of the problems under discussion. Hours, full to overflowing, passed all too quickly. In addition to all these workshop activities, many of us had an auditor's pass and visited here and there as time permitted. Many lectures on the campus were open to us—too many to attend. One week alone, there were seventy lectures on the campus to select from, ranging from discussions on family life to current national and international events and a poet's reading from his own writings. Harvard Summer School was teeming with interest. Too, campus life was enjoyable with students from forty-five states and eighteen foreign countries and possessions. People were cordial and friendly, a spirit which brought many favorable comments.

But in addition to the hours of work, too, there were the social gatherings where we saw our friendly staff at play and saw the spirit of Puck behind these wise, sympathetic guides. A social gathering early the first week in Phillips Brooks House introduced us to the staff of all the workshops. At historical Wayside Inn we had a dinner followed by speeches which showed the scintillating wit and love of fun in the staff we were learning to feel our friends. A dinner at Lowell House was completed by the workers' furnishing a hilarious program. Our last was an old-fashioned clam bake at the shore preceded by swims for those who wished and followed by community singing. We did become acquainted, both with our leaders and with our fellow participants. Already I have enjoyed hearing from several of my fellow workers from Wisconsin, from Illinois, from Ohio, as well as neighbors I had never known, while some of my staff are still generously giving me advice, help, and encouragement in the continuance of my summer project.

Just what did I gain? Perhaps I sound overenthusiastic, but I am sincere in all I say. I shall have to admit I went tired; I came away refreshed, in spite of the work—even regretful that so soon we had to leave these friendly people. I, too, had been a pupil and had the point of view of doing the listening, of reading long assignments, of writing papers, and of taking tests. There was a satisfying sense of having gained a stimulation in work, an increased insight into some of the newer methods of education. Or in the words of the chapel speaker, I had fitted some of the keys to the locks and entered the gateways to bring back some of the rich treasures of friendships, of fresh points of view, and of democratic ways in a changing world—but in a world where I am free to use this wealth of thought and exploration.

Workshops at Bucknell University

FRANK G. DAVIS

Director of Guidance Workshop

C. WILLARD SMITH

Director of Stagecraft Workshop

Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania

"The workshop as conceived at Bucknell University is a situation in which people with definite problems organize to solve these problems under the leadership of experts and under their own steam. There are no formal classes, no lecture courses. Work on individual problems, seminar round-table discussions, individual conferences, small group meetings of persons working on similar problems, research in a well-equipped library, and carefully planned laboratory tryouts form a typical day's activities. Enrollment in such a workshop means a summer of individualized study, centered around a special problem to which the student himself wants an answer."

The above statement is quoted from a circular describing the guidance, teaching, and stagecraft workshops conducted in the summer of 1940. Since the project was experimental, rigid limits were set to the size of each shop. The guidance workshop was limited to thirty members, the teaching workshop to twenty, and the stagecraft to an enrollment of fifteen. The sixty-four persons who enrolled had a unique experience of living, working, and playing together for a period of six weeks. Sections of men's and women's dormitories were assigned to members and an attractive sunporch was reserved for the daily workshop luncheon.

THE WORKSHOP IN GUIDANCE

Persons registered in the guidance workshop were mainly those with experience or considerable academic training in the field. As a result of these experiences, most of them came with definite problems which they believed they could solve more effectively in an informal work situation. Among the problems presented were the planning of a complete home-room program, a leadership training course for secondary-school-student officers, evaluation of an actual personnel situation resulting in plans for improvement, a vocational guidance program, a feasible personnel testing program, a community activities program, case studies in personnel work, how to counsel students effectively. One secondary-school principal in a traditional school came to learn what this guidance idea was all about. Some came with no specific problems but with a "vague uneasiness," which in most cases was not hard to translate into a real challenge. Lengthy application blanks which provided personnel information on the registrants, as well as statements of objectives, enabled the staff to assist most of them in getting launched immediately on their summer's work. The first morning was devoted to a group conference in which many problems were raised. During most of the first week numerous uncertainties were cleared up in individual conferences.

Nine persons composed the workshop staff. One of these gave full time and acted as assistant director. Two others spent two hours each per day on the job and the remainder were specialists in the various phases of pupil-personnel work, who spent at least one full week each with the group. This staff organization provided a variety of personalities and skills while at the same time allowing for continuity and stability.

This workshop was open from eight to twelve and two to four o'clock each day. At least two staff members were constantly on hand to aid students requesting help and rarely was any staff member found unoccupied in individual or small-group conference. The period from ten to twelve was given to group discussions led by the visiting specialist. To assure definiteness of purpose each student was required to report in writing his activities and reading for the past week and his plans for the following week. No final examinations were required but each student handed in at the end of the summer session a written report on his objectives, techniques, and findings.

The physical set-up for the guidance workshop was almost ideal. The men's lounge on the second floor of Roberts Hall, a room attractively and comfortably furnished, was selected as headquarters and group conference room. This room was flanked on three sides by six small rooms opening directly into it, and used for office, library, and individual and small group conferences. Less than one hundred feet away was the main college library. The workshop library, well stocked with books, magazines, manuals, guidance programs, and testing materials, with an attendant on hand, was the most popular side room. Each day an exhibit of guidance materials was displayed on a bulletin board and on tables in the conference room.

THE WORKSHOP IN TEACHING

Into the teaching workshop came experienced teachers with problems. These teachers were divided into three groups: outstanding teachers appreciating their jobs and desiring to enhance their service; those who had discovered exceptional weaknesses or had had these pointed out to them by supervisors; and teachers who, approaching their jobs intelligently, had discovered significant problems they desired to solve. Tied up closely with the demonstration school, the teaching workshop was directed by a man noted for his teaching skill and professional interest. He met the group twice a week and held many individual conferences. Each student was assigned to the immediate direction of a specialist in his subject field. These advisers were in most cases selected teachers in the demonstration school. One college professor with long experience in teacher training acted as adviser for three students who had problems in the teaching of science. Since a master teacher was responsible for the direction of not more than four students, he had an excellent opportunity to become thoroughly acquainted with each and to give personal attention to the problems at hand. It is in this personal relationship that the adviser really gets acquainted with the educational philosophy of the student. It is believed that some excellent results were accomplished with a few students whose attitudes were mid-Victorian to say the least.

Problems presented to this workshop varied in type and difficulty. In all cases the registrants were assigned to the demonstration school for observation and special work. In one case the difficulty was such that the student was given two full weeks of teaching experience under close supervision, although this person had been a teacher in the public schools for the past fifteen years. The practice here, as in the guidance workshop, was that of diagnosis and an endeavor to find the proper answer.

It is the judgment of those who observed the activities of the teaching workshop that this is a logical substitute for the traditional course in special methods. It is difficult to obtain expert instructors for such courses and when organized they fail to draw experienced teachers. The teaching workshop, on the other hand, can be directed by a teaching expert with wide professional training and each student enrolled can have close direction and supervision by an artist in his subject field, who is at the same time working in the classroom on the very problems which are disturbing the student. It is probably time for us to make our methods courses practical laboratory experiences with real live children under the close supervision of master teachers.

One indispensable feature of the guidance and teaching workshops was the tie-up with the summer demonstration school, in which demonstration and practice teaching were carried on. A number of guidance students interested in trying out specific techniques were assigned to the demonstration school as a part of the summer's program. Thus in some cases students were working under the direction of staff members in both workshops. Sometimes the problem presented made it difficult for the student to select the shop in which he preferred to work. One young lady who had enrolled for guidance found that her problem could not be solved unless her classroom teaching were improved. Accordingly, while still attending the daily group conferences on guidance, she put herself under the direction of an expert in the teaching of Latin and gained an experience which gave her a new picture of her job and revolutionized her classroom teaching.

THE WORKSHOP IN STAGECRAFT

For several years we had "offered" regular courses in amateur dramatics as a part of our summer-school program. To a degree they were successful but, on the other hand, they were not "good theatre." The hobgoblin of academic credits, semester hours, time serving, and carefully measured effort haunted the classroom, the stage, and the scenery workshop. In other words, we were failing even to suggest that the first requirement of effective production in the theatre, amateur or professional, was work—time-consuming, enthusiastic, unselfish devotion to a co-operative undertaking.

Then something happened which slightly changed the focus of our attention. Mr. Harry Gresham, the manager of a professional summer stock company with headquarters at Eagles Mere, Pennsylvania, visited our campus to arrange for a series of plays to be presented each Monday evening during our summer session. It occurred to us that this set-up furnished the ideal opportunity for our dramatics students to work with professional players, and the stagecraft workshop was born. Arrangements were now made to turn over the work on scenery and stage lighting for four consecutive plays to the workshop. Our function became clear, our activity was defined, for a specific problem immediately confronted us. Our workshop was accordingly organized to provide practical experience in the design, construction, and painting of scenery, and in the design, "plotting," and setting-up of lighting arrangements for the program of plays. We required each applicant for admission to membership in the workshop to give a detailed account of his experience and his interest in the amateur theatre, in order to insure ourselves against a wrong start.

Then the fun began. The first week was a season of confused excitement, in which it was necessary for the director of the workshop to assume most of the responsibility for getting the scene set. But the curtain went up on time with almost everything in place. Out of that week came one of the most valuable experiences of the summer; weeks of lectures in the classroom, months of reading books on "how to," never taught quite as effectively the lesson of the necessity of plan, design, detail, and efficient organization in theatrical production as did the experience of this furious week. Without being ordered to do so, the members of the workshop, with the assistance of the director, voluntarily worked out a plan for production which was immediately put into effect, and which was maintained without essential alteration for the rest of the season.

The stagecraft workshop reached its conclusion in a state of breathless enthusiasm with every member fully aware, we think, of the practical as well as the artistic aspects of stagecraft. The hobgoblin of perfunctory effort had been blown out of his dark corner, the best handbooks on stage production had been used, not merely read against the necessity of a conventional recitation; skills had been developed, abilities recognized and discovered. The most enthusiastic supporters of the workshop idea were the professional players who worked in the sets every week.

The social phases of the program, applying to all three workshops, should be mentioned. Excursions to places of professional and historical interest, picnics, teas, and luncheons formed the bulk of social affairs. But even here the intellectual was not neglected. At the daily luncheon speeches were heard almost daily on problems of interest to the group. These talks were made by workshop specialists, university faculty members, and speakers brought to the campus for these occasions. No speech was permitted to be over fifteen minutes in length and none were dull.

We have, as a result of our experiences, more respect than ever for the workshop as an educational device. We are sure of its advantages. We are certain, furthermore, that it is not for the laggards, the time-servers, the "credit artists," or the people who want a "cultural" vacation. The workshop is for men and women who have something on their minds, who are determined that, whatever it may be, something must be done about it.

Experimental Workshops in Teacher Education at Stanford University

ALVIN C. EURICH

Professor of Education, Stanford University, California

Workshops—at least under that name—are new in the professional education of teachers. Like most developments in secondary schools and colleges, they evolved from a recognition of inadequacies in current programs and from a better understanding of needs. In recent years there has been a growing belief that teacher education, particularly for experienced workers, was too far removed from the actual problems of the school. Either the gap between practice and theory was too wide or the theory was so spun out of whole cloth that it could not be applied. As a result teachers in summer schools and those pursuing graduate work while on leave from their jobs thought of further professional education and of regular classroom work as two wholly different lines of effort never to cross each other. Much of the research of the professional educator contributed unwittingly to this schism. Workshops provide for the reunion of real teaching or administrative problems and educational theory.

EARLY EFFORTS

At Stanford University a workshop was first introduced in an effort to make research more meaningful for educational practice. In their investigations in the field of guidance, Dean Kefauver and Professor Hand were working out a developmental conception of guidance programs that required further education of the teachers involved. As a result they called together, during the summer of 1934, teachers and administrators in two school systems. For four weeks these representatives worked together on the Stanford campus planning the details of their guidance activities that were to be a part of the study. These experienced teachers worked directly on their problems. They conferred with staff members; they utilized the resources of the library, the curriculum laboratory and the entire community; they met sometimes in groups of three or four, at other times in larger groups to think through their ideas and suggestions from staff members or from their reading. By the end of the period feasible plans in terms of local situations in which they were to be applied developed cooperatively. The following summer, after one year of trying out original plans, the group assembled again for a similar period of work and study. In other words it may be said that the directors of this investigation in guidance conceived their project as involving more than the collection of data; they recognized that if studies were to be made of better guidance practices, the teachers and administrators who are responsible for those practices must take part in a program of professional development. A report of the effectiveness of this work is now in press.¹

¹Kefauver, Grayson N., and Hand, Harold C. Appraising Guidance in Secondary Schools. Macmillan Company. In press.

When in 1937 the Stanford Language Arts Investigation got under way through grants from the General Education Board, the same techniques were followed. Nine educational centers scattered throughout the West from Seattle to Phoenix were invited to co-operate in the project. To plan the details, representatives from these schools came to Stanford for a period of four weeks in 1937. They came back in 1938 and again in 1939 to renew their progress in developing new methods for teaching the language arts and to study and criticize materials they had formulated. Thus each summer for three years, teachers planned co-operatively in a workshop with professional educators, and then went back to their classrooms to see how feasible and sound their plans actually were. Similarly, the Stanford Social Studies Investigation now in the third year of its five-year plan, has for the last two summers brought together teachers from ten centers for comparable workshop experiences. In this manner a new type of educational research was responsible for a series of workshops that emerged on the Stanford campus.

Another workshop grew out of group consulting services. In 1935 Stanford University entered into a plan with Santa Barbara City and County school systems, to provide group consulting services. Under its provisions, the faculty in the School of Education was to work with the administration, with committees and with individual teachers in a concerted curriculum development program. Most of the consultation was carried on during relatively short intervals of two or three days to a week, scheduled intermittently. For two summers, small groups of the Santa Barbara staff members worked with the faculty on the Stanford campus. Then a demand arose for longer periods of planning. As a result a special workshop for Santa Barbara teachers was scheduled for a four-weeks period during the summer of 1940. Approximately thirty teachers attended to work together under the direction of Stanford faculty members on their plans and materials for the current school year. Requests for similar workshops are beginning to come in from other counties.

RECENT EFFORTS

Thus both research and consultation services stimulated the organization of workshops for special groups. With this stimulation the question naturally arose of whether Stanford could make like opportunities generally available for teachers. A small grant from the Committee on Workshops and Field Services of the Progressive Education Association aided in making arrangements for the summer of 1939. Because of the general interest in evaluation and more particularly because of special interest on the part of the California Co-operating Schools, the schedule provided for an Evaluation Workshop that would extend over six weeks. The designation proved to be confusing. Teachers with many different types of problems applied for admission. All with definite problems were finally admitted regardless of the area of concern.

The workshop opened with forty-seven enrollees, twenty of whom were from California and the rest from a widely scattered area. Thirty-two of the group were teachers, and fifteen held either a part- or full-time administrative post. In terms of levels at which they taught or administered, the distribution was as follows: senior high school, twenty-one; junior high, seven; throughout the system, six; senior high and junior college, five; junior college, four; elementary, three; junior and senior high school, one. The years of teaching experience extended from less than one to thirty-three with a median at 13.6. Two of the group had earned doctor of philosophy degrees, twenty-four master's and twenty-one bachelor's degrees.

The problems expressed in the application forms, on which the members of the group wished to work, may be classified in the following areas of interest; guidance, fifteen; total program, seven; language arts, six; general curriculum, five; core curriculum and evaluation, four each; science, social studies, professional education, and remedial reading, one each.

These data concerning the characteristics of the group are important because they reveal a striking diversity of interests, experience and training. Furthermore the members of the group did not wish to live together in one wing of a college dormitory as originally provided. If with such diversity and with scattered living quarters a workshop can operate successfully, it is a promising method for teacher education in almost any situation. No workshop staff would regard such circumstances as ideal but if workshops are feasible only under ideal conditions their usefulness is greatly limited. Staff and student appraisal of a workshop offered for such a diverse group is summarized below.

THE PURPOSES OF THE WORKSHOP

To work with this group of teachers and administrators there was available a staff of four who were on duty throughout the full six weeks and of seven additional members whose periods of service varied, extending from two to four weeks. At the first general session, the purposes of the workshop as seen by the staff were stated by the director as follows: The workshop would provide:

1. An opportunity for students registered to work directly, with the aid of all the resources Stanford could provide, on the specific problems they brought with them from their own classrooms and offices.
2. Experiences in democratic living and group planning and thereby put into practice in professional education the theory which educators have long advocated for elementary and secondary school groups. (Too often in education classrooms, the instructor expounds a theory which he never thinks of putting into practice.)
3. A setting conducive to the development of relations between staff and students that would be most effective for learning. Formal classroom procedure would be abandoned and most of the time reserved for small group meetings and individual conferences. Every effort would be made to live—work, play, learn—together.

4. An opportunity to become acquainted with educational workers of similar interests and to learn from them first hand about significant developments in specific schools scattered throughout the country.
5. An opportunity for staff and students alike to think further about and to clarify their philosophies of education and to think through the implications for schools in a democratic society.
6. Its members a chance to become familiar with and to appraise some of the several trends in education.

FORMING THE INTEREST GROUPS

In the light of these purposes the first task of the group was to consider together the specific problems to which the individual members wished to give extended consideration. The second task was to work out the organization and administrative procedures most appropriate to the purposes for which they came together. On the second day, therefore, the entire group decided that the following committees could assume designated functions in connection with the administration of various activities in which members might engage: Planning and Policies Committee, Library and Materials Committee, Recreation Committee, Trip Committee, Publications Committee, Editorial Committee, Frolicsome Annual Committee, and Evaluation Committee. Students and faculty selected voluntarily the committee or committees on which they desired to serve. The reports of these committees were discussed in general sessions where all plans for the group were finally agreed upon.

Five special interest groups were then formed centering about the following areas: guidance, general education, language arts, science and social studies. At the end of the first two weeks, a reconsideration of individual interests and projects led to the formation of three major interest groups: curriculum, evaluation and general. The group on evaluation later divided into three sub-groups giving major considerations to: evaluation of social development, evaluation of critical thinking, evaluation of guidance and the total educational program. This shift in groupings reveals the flexibility of the program and the continuous efforts to make the necessary adjustments in order to meet most adequately the individual problems and needs. Each of these interest groups met regularly with members of the staff.

UNIFYING THE GROUP AS A WHOLE

General sessions for the whole workshop group were held daily during the first half of the period of work and less frequently thereafter. At these meetings consideration was given to reports from committees, interest groups, individual staff members and students. At times educational motion pictures were shown and discussed. Basic educational philosophies were reviewed in relation to individual projects.

Judgments concerning the value of the general sessions varied. A few members of the group felt strongly that too many such sessions were held. Until the end of the fourth week, the majority of the group maintained that general sessions should not be discontinued. In view of the diversity of interests and experiences represented, the staff felt that general sessions were held too frequently. They recommended a reduction in number as early as the second week, but the policies committee and the total group in planning sessions believed that the general sessions were necessary, therefore they were continued.

Aside from the special interest and general meetings, frequent individual conferences with the staff and informal sessions of two, three, or four members provided ample opportunity to exchange or test out ideas and get criticisms on materials produced.

To round out the program further, numerous social occasions were planned. Daily teas, picnics, dinners, luncheons, bridge parties, trips including one to the San Francisco Exposition, games of golf, tennis or baseball, hikes and swims were in the calendar of events. The weekly fun sheets and the Frolicsome Annual gave outlets for written expression of amusing ideas or events. Before the close of the workshop, the group felt that every talent in the group had found some channel for expression.

APPRAISAL OF OUTCOMES

The appraisal of any such enterprise is always difficult yet quite necessary for further planning. Tangible evidence of accomplishments is available in the reports submitted by the students and reports of progress by the staff. Abstracts of a number of the students' contributions were published in a symposium on evaluation that appeared in the October, 1939, issue of the California Journal of Secondary Education.

Four other means of appraisal were utilized during the summer: A staff questionnaire, a student questionnaire, cumulative records of participants in the workshop and an educational issues test given at the beginning and again at the end of the workshop period. Limitations of space will permit only a brief summary of the evidence that accumulated.

At the close of the summer, Dr. J. Paul Leonard who served as Associate Director, collected and summarized the judgments of the staff toward the progress of each student. Grades were not assigned, instead a staff filed anecdotal records that were used in making the summary. These statements were classified under four headings according to whether they indicated that the student had made considerable progress, reasonable progress, little progress, and no progress. The number of instructors from whom statements were available on individual students ranged from one to five. Twenty-three students or approximately half of both faculty and students were rated by forty-five instructors' statements as having made considerable progress; thirty-one students were rated by forty-three statements as having made reasonable progress; twelve students by thirty-one statements as having made little progress; and three students by three statements as having made no progress. The ratings of only six students varied over three points on the four-point scale; no student's ratings varied over the entire range. Although this general summary reveals that the staff thought most students made either reasonable or considerable progress, the single statements are even more revealing in regard to the progress of individual students.

The summary of the questionnaires filled out by the students yields some evidence on the extent to which they considered the workshop as valuable and, more concretely, on what it helped them to accomplish. In stating how valuable the summer's experience as a whole had been, twenty-one students said "of great value," nineteen "of much value," four "of some value" and only one "of little value."

Of the forty-seven students enrolled, the numbers listing various accomplishments are as follows:

Became acquainted with new materials.....	42
Clarified my points of view.....	39
Made plans to experiment in my work.....	38
Made plans for evaluating my own program.....	35
Acquired materials and bibliographies.....	35
Made plans for classroom procedures.....	32
Made plans for the total school program.....	31
Developed tests to be used next year.....	22
Constructed curriculum units.....	19
Made plans for evaluating the total school program.....	15
Accomplished other types of work.....	31

In addition, thirty students said the workshop experience helped them achieve a more satisfying personal philosophy or adjustment to life; twelve said it had not; and the rest of them failed to react to this question.

The student's ratings of their workshop experiences in comparison with those of regular summer sessions they had attended previously, revealed that:

1. The workshop was of more value for twenty-seven and the summer session of more value for two.
2. More professional literature was read in the workshop by sixteen and in the summer session by fourteen.
3. More contacts with other persons who were helpful were provided in the workshop for thirty-five and in the summer session for none.
4. More help on own problems was given in the workshop for thirty-one and in the summer session for none.
5. Eleven admitted doing more work in the workshop and thirteen more work in the summer session.
6. The workshop was enjoyed more by thirty-two and no one said he enjoyed the summer session more than workshop.

It is perfectly clear from these reactions that those who had registered previously in regular summer session were more satisfied with their workshop experiences.

Using these and other data—inadequate as they are—the Stanford School of Education staff planned and conducted another workshop during the summer of 1940. The theme was changed from Evaluation to Teacher Development. In general the same procedures were followed but they were carried on more smoothly. The group had clearly profited from the experiences of the previous summer. There was less lost motion in getting under way, less of a feeling of insecurity on the part of the students during the first two weeks, and even a greater sense of progress at the end of the period because it was possible to work with the same staff members for a full six or eight weeks. The shifting personnel of the previous summer did not prove as satisfactory as the same staff serving continuously.

FUTURE PLANS

With these experiences in the background, Stanford is now concerned with the problem of incorporating the advantages of the workshop procedures in its total program for teachers. The significant characteristics of the workshop approach that one or more staff members considered as having implications for the total program are: the flexible program, individual conferences between a student and many staff members, informal working relationships between students and faculty, emphasis upon individual student problems, the creative and productive approach, small working groups organized around problems of common interests, freedom from routine requirements, absence of set lectures, the give-and-take relationships between staff members, ready accessibility of many leaders, several instructors available in discussion groups permitting expression of contrasting points of view, informal social contacts and large blocks of time available for work on problems that are of major interest.

Some of these features were already part of the regular teacher education program at Stanford. The faculty has recently taken action to incorporate others. Experimentation with workshops will continue. More thorough-going efforts will be made to evaluate the newer procedures through follow-up studies such as are now under way. With the accumulated experience at Stanford and at other colleges and universities that are developing and adapting the workshop approach to the education of teachers, the schools may expect to be able to employ teachers who have experienced, as well as know about, sound educational procedures, who have learned how to work with others by taking part in co-operative planning and activities, who fully realize that a teacher's educational philosophy must be continuously evolving and that his practices can be consistent with that philosophy only through careful planning, and who fully sense the necessity for extending their evaluation procedures in order to obtain better estimates of the contributions they are making to the lives of boys and girls. Designed to accomplish these purposes, the workshop approach, unlike many methods of teaching, is not a fixed set of rule-of-thumb procedures. Its chief provisions are flexibility and adaptability to individual and group purposes. If workshops remain such, they may mark a new era of co-operation between the schools—their problems and needs in a democratic society—and programs of teacher education.

Workshops at the University of Chicago

RALPH W. TYLER

Chairman, Department of Education and Chief Examiner, University of Chicago

Two developments in American schools have given workshops significance. The number of new teachers added to the profession annually has been reduced nearly eighty per cent in the past twenty years, whereas the average length of service of teachers in American schools has trebled. This situation frees a great deal of the energy of teacher-education institutions from preparing new teachers and, simultaneously, gives greater opportunity for continuing the education of teachers now in service.

The second development is the wide-scale re-examination of the educational program in elementary and secondary schools in an effort to rebuild it. More than half of the city-school systems in this country are in the process of curriculum reconstruction, and at the same time the pupil personnel services and administrative activities are under scrutiny.

The demand for an attack on the educational problems of the local schools, coupled with the fact that the staffs in these schools are remaining in the profession long enough to develop professional competence, makes summer workshops strategically important. Fundamentally a workshop provides a situation for school staffs, with the aid of a university faculty members and library and laboratory facilities of the university, to work on the problems that they bring from their own institutions. Experience with workshops shows that the better teachers are willing to devote a great deal of time and energy in attacking the problems of their own schools. The workshop provides certain advantages which are not available in the local school, such as a wider range of persons with specialized competence to guide the studies; more adequate library facilities; and contacts with staffs of other schools, which stimulate a more varied perspective.

From this analysis, it can be seen that workshops on educational problems involve three fundamental purposes. From the standpoint of the local school, the primary purpose of the workshop is to provide an opportunity for teachers and administrators from the school to work on needed plans and materials. From the standpoint of the university, the purpose of the workshop is to bring educational theory and the results of scientific studies to bear on school practices. This integration of theory and practice is a primary requisite for the improvement of American education. From the standpoints of the local school, the workshop participants, and the university, the purposes of the workshop is to provide an effective means for the advanced education of teachers and administrators.

Two workshops were conducted in 1939 by the University of Chicago, one for secondary-school teachers and the other for college faculty members. During the summer of 1940 the University, in co-operation with the American Council on Education, The Progressive Education Association, the Michigan Education Association, and the W. K. Kellogg foundation, conducted six workshops—four on the campus at Chicago and two in Michigan. On the Chicago campus were workshops for staff members of elementary schools, secondary schools, colleges, and teacher-education institutions. In Michigan one workshop emphasized problems of health and nutrition, while the other was for teachers of rural elementary schools.

The following problems are typical of those brought to the Chicago secondary-school workshop last summer, and illustrate both their range and their educational significance. A group of teachers from the Tulsa, Oklahoma, secondary schools worked together on the construction of units for the new "core curriculum" which is in the process of development in that city. Several staff members from Denver developed a plan for pupil guidance including appropriate record forms, and methods for selecting and interpreting information about individual pupils. A teacher from the Horace Mann School, of Teachers College, Columbia University, constructed certain tests to provide a more adequate evaluation of the social science course in that school. A group of staff members from the Cheltenham Township High School, in Pennsylvania, worked intensively in the curriculum for non-college pupils, a problem critical in many secondary schools.

Several teachers from Altoona, Pennsylvania, worked on a fused or correlated curriculum involving several subjects. A teacher from one of the Los Angeles secondary schools was constructing a science course as a part of the new program in general education in that school. Another workshop participant from one of the suburbs of Philadelphia selected and organized appropriate materials from the field of literature for a course aimed to give greater insight into some of the problems of human relations.

One of the teachers in an Oakland, California, secondary school developed a social science course which seeks to give a more adequate understanding of contemporary problems in international relations, while another from the same school constructed tests and other instruments for evaluating a new course in The Nature of Proof. One of the Lakewood, Ohio, staff was working on a new type of a course in history. A home economics teacher from Evanston, Illinois, developed a curriculum unit on family relations and a plan for a comprehensive appraisal of the unit. Several teachers of the fine arts correlated their work with other phases of the school program.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE WORKSHOPS

The attack upon these typical problems illustrate several characteristics of the Chicago workshops. In the first place, a satisfactory solution to any of these problems utilizes the knowledge, the points of view, and the techniques of several fields. For example, as the group from Tulsa developed units for their new curriculum, they consulted two staff members in the social sciences regarding materials, points of view, and bibliographic references; they consulted a staff member in English relative to the contributions which literature might make to this unit; they discussed the general plan of the several units with two staff members in the field of guidance and adolescent psychology in order to see how far the program was appropriate to the maturity of adolescents; they consulted a staff member in the field of audio and visual materials to locate possible motion picture films and radio programs which might be utilized as part of the unit; they worked with a staff member in the field of science to see the ways in which certain biological material might be utilized in the unit; and they consulted staff members in the field of testing and evaluation to find appropriate evaluation materials for the unit. Throughout their work two staff members guided them in the general field of curriculum construction.

This use of a variety of resources was not restricted to groups working on broad curriculum units. The home economics teacher who developed the unit in family relations utilized staff members in home economics, in social studies, in guidance and adolescent psychology, and in testing and evaluation. In addition, she, too, consulted with the staff member in the general field of curriculum construction. In almost all cases the types of problems which are of importance in the local school are sufficiently broad to require the advice and assistance of staff members from several fields. The workshop differs from a "practicum" or other type of "special problems" course taught by one instructor. In place of one staff member being available for the student, each participant has access to several staff members and to other resources. These other resources made available to the participants include such facilities as are appropriate from any part of the University and the city of Chicago. Not the least of these resources is the advice of other workshop participants. The cross-fertilization arising from the criticism which a group of participants gives to the plans presented by one of the individuals is valued highly by those who have attended workshops.

In order to make these various facilities available to workshop participants, organization and schedule have played their part. In the first place, small groups were formed and met throughout the summer. These groups were formed on two bases, one by subject field, such as a group of social-studies teachers, home economics teachers, science teachers, and the like, while the other was by problems or interests which cut across subject matter lines, such as a group on the construction of tests, a group on guidance problems, on administrative problems, and the like. In addition to the small group meetings, a period of several hours each day was set aside for participants to confer with staff members. In so far as possible all of the staff and participants were available for conferences at the same time so that a participant could schedule a meeting with any staff member without the likelihood of conflict. Several hours were also set aside for participants to work on their own materials, either individually or in co-operation with others with a similar problem. Finally, once or twice a week, large group meetings were provided which served to present to the participants relevant ideas, materials, or other resources which were new to most of the workshop.

EVALUATING THE WORKSHOP

The success of the workshop, its strengths and weaknesses, have been determined each year by three methods. In the first place, every participant was asked to criticize the program and to fill out a rather extensive questionnaire indicating his judgment as to strengths and weaknesses. In the second place, a somewhat similar statement was obtained from the staff. Finally, a follow-up was made of a sample of the participants after they had returned to their schools in order to see how far the workshop had affected the actual program in the schools. A report of the effectiveness of the workshop is given in greater detail in a publication of the National Committee on Workshops of the Progressive Education Association.³ In general, these several methods of appraisal gave consistent results. The participants and the staff believed that significant work had been done on the projects brought to the workshops, and the visits to the schools indicated that this work was actually used by most of the participants when they returned to the schools. Both the participants and the staff believed that the participants had made marked growth in their points of view, their knowledge, and in their techniques for attacking educational problems. Furthermore, since the workshop, several administrators in the local schools have reported, "The teachers who went to workshops have fundamentally changed." This appraisal gives reason for believing that the workshop is becoming a means for making improvements in the practices as well as the theory of secondary education.

At this point it may be necessary to remark that the mere holding of a workshop will not prove a panacea for the in-service education of teachers and administrators. Fundamental to the success of any workshop is the provision of appropriate resources and the careful selection of participants. Unless the workshop provides a properly balanced group of well-trained staff members, familiar with the important researches in their fields, skilled in the techniques for attacking the problems in their fields, and able to work effectively with experienced teachers and administrators, the workshop may fail to give intelligent leadership. Unless the workshop includes an adequate library and other collections of relevant materials, the participants will have few ideas to digest. Unless participants are chosen who have real problems, serious interest in attacking them, and a background of understanding, the workshop may become a playground or a "talkfest."

FUTURE WORKSHOPS

What of the future workshops at the University of Chicago? In the summer of 1941, workshops will be conducted for the staffs of secondary schools, colleges, and elementary schools. These workshops will run throughout the Summer Quarter so that participants may enroll for one or both Terms. In addition especial attention will be given during the First Term to problems growing out of the relations of the National Youth Administration to secondary schools. The National Youth Administration and the University of Chicago are co-operating to offer this Workshop on Youth, making it available for NYA personnel and for selected secondary-school principals and teachers concerned with the administration of NYA programs. The National Youth Administration will furnish approximately half of the staff and the University of Chicago, the other half. Instructors furnished by the National Youth Administration will include a state administrator, a regional school-work director, a director of the out-of-school program, a field representative, and some assistants from the national office at Washington. The University will provide staff members trained in school administration, in educational sociology, in the growth and development of children, in curriculum construction, and in evaluation. The University is also supplying a school administrator who has had unusual success in articulating both the in- and the out-of-school NYA program with the local school work.

The idea of this workshop grew out of several considerations. The National Youth Administration and the schools should have somewhat complementary functions in preparing young people for a place in society. The National Youth Administration employs young people both in school and out of school on socially desirable, non-competitive jobs. The work experience, for which a wage is paid, is one of the helpful experiences in inducting young people into adulthood. The schools have a responsibility in assigning youth to and supervising them on the job in the schools. The schools also have a responsibility in organizing related training courses for out-of-school youth and for furnishing such instruction in the schools.

Because of changes in society it is not possible for the home or the local community to furnish the work experience which was readily available in former decades. Except for youth on farms it is almost impossible for a young person to gain work experience in the home. Technical developments have removed many of the chores such as carrying in wood and water which occupied many youth at an earlier time; the coming of the automobile has relieved young people of the responsibility and incidental work experience which came in taking care of the family horse. Changes in society have made it far more difficult for young people to leave school and to secure a full-time job in industry. The age structure of society has changed so that it is almost impossible for a young person to find a job because there are more adults available than there are jobs. This condition has been intensified by the productivity of the individual worker so that fewer workers can produce a given volume of goods. The increased competition for jobs makes it difficult for young people to secure their first job.

The responsibility of furnishing work experience for some of the four million unemployed young people, sixteen to twenty-five years of age, has been assumed by the Federal Government. Work experience is provided so as to enable youth to attend school, to build morale among young people, and to furnish them with profitable and productive activity until they can be absorbed in industry. It is imperative that these young people shall be assigned to worthwhile jobs, that they shall recognize these jobs as producing something of value to them and society, that they shall be carefully supervised, that they shall appreciate the necessity of doing an honest job for remuneration, and that they shall have an opportunity to experience various types of work in order to choose more wisely among work opportunities which may be available. Many schools have not developed plans for meeting this responsibility.

To attack this problem, several types of resources are necessary. There is basic knowledge existing in research institutions which will cast light on the problems of young people. Among these resources may be mentioned the research findings relating to physical, emotional, and social growth, and development of young people. Such materials have been produced in many universities and are being synthesized at the University of Chicago. Another series of related studies are those carried out by the American Youth Commission. The relationship of the social order to the schools and its implications for the National Youth Administration and for work experience are also studied at several university centers.

NYA AND SCHOOL CO-OPERATION

The practical experience of the National Youth Administration in setting up its various programs and in trying to evolve an appropriate relationship to the schools will provide another resource for this workshop. Techniques for constructing vital instructional programs for both in- and out-of-school youth as well as curriculum materials will be assembled for the workshop participants. These materials deal not only with related training of a vocational character but also with training for democratic citizenship.

This Workshop on Youth is an excellent illustration of the use of the University Workshop as a means for solving perplexing educational problems. School administrators have been occupied with the problems of internal organization of the school and with interpreting schools to the public; they have had a constant problem in taking care of the rapidly increasing secondary-school enrollment and in securing adequate funds to operate the schools. They have had little chance to plan work opportunities in the school for which wages may be paid; they have had little time to devise ways for securing maximum benefit from the work experiences which may be allocated to youth in school without pay. School people generally have not developed satisfactory procedures for supervising youth on the job and for providing appropriate educational opportunities for them.

Many NYA officials have been principally occupied with social service activities in relieving human want, in providing jobs for out-of-school youth and in multitudinous and complex problems which are incident to an organization which is only five years old and which operates in every state to distribute (in 1940-41) over one hundred and thirty million dollars to young people as compensation for their work experience. It is inevitable that some misunderstanding should have arisen between school people and NYA officials. Some school men believe that the National Youth Administration is attempting to establish a dual educational system. Many NYA workers feel that school people have failed to see the implication of work in the educational process, or have accepted the responsibility half-heartedly.

It is highly desirable that methods should now be worked out for articulating the schools and the NYA more closely. If the Workshop on Youth brings about a common understanding of their mutual problems, and develops methods for solving some of them, an important contribution will have been made to secondary education.

Summer Workshops in Our Professional Schools

So that the school administrators, who have a responsibility for the improvement of instruction and the in-service training of teachers, could have assistance in directing school staffs, the foregoing articles have been assembled in THE BULLETIN. These are descriptions of the organization, the daily program, and the purpose of this newer type of professional education for teachers, "The Workshop." These accounts were secured from a variety of sources; directors, assistant directors, staff members and attendants at several workshops during the summer of 1940, and selected at random on a geographical basis. Unfortunately, space permits the description of only a few of these many summer workshops.

At this early date it is difficult to assemble a list of institutions that have had, or are planning to have workshops during the summer of 1941. However, a list, subject to correction, is submitted. In a later issue of THE BULLETIN it is the plan to publish a list of institutions that will have summer workshops in 1941. All institutions not listed, as well as these listed, are requested to supply information to Mr. Paul E. Elicker, Executive Secretary, 1201 Sixteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., with the date of the session, the name of the director, and the major interest of the workshop.

News Notes

RADIO AND THE CLASSROOM—The National Broadcasting Company, RCA Building, Radio City, New York, prepares for distribution a pre-release of educational programs for the month next succeeding. A brief description and the time of each of these programs are given in such a form as is most usable to the busy school administrators as well as teachers.

CAREERS FOR YOUTH—Temple University, Philadelphia, has set the dates of March 21-22 next, for its seventh annual Career Conference for secondary-education students. It is expected, more than 1,500 secondary-education students from four states will assemble. Thirty-five different and distinct "career fields" will be explored by the conference, ranging from apprenticeships in trades to professional study for medicine, law, and engineering. Featuring the conference will be a "workshop conference." Students who are especially interested in methods and procedures for determining aptitudes, skills, and interest patterns, as a part of the process of choosing a vocation and setting up education plans, are invited to this session. Opportunity is given to discuss specific problems with specialists in counseling and guidance.

Another feature of the two-day conference is a Guidance Clinic for Parents, at which mothers and fathers interested in the planning of careers for their children will be given advice and suggestions by a group of experts. On the opening day there will be a discussion for counselors, registrars, and secondary-school principals, demonstrating the techniques and instruments used in the transition from school to college. The conference will be climaxed by a general session on March 22, at which an outstanding college president will be the principal speaker.

NEWSPAPERS AND THE PUBLIC—"There are approximately 1,900 daily newspapers, printed in English in the United States. Their total daily circulation is about 40,000,000, with about 31,500,000 on Sunday. For these copies, the publishers receive, in your pennies, an annual total of about $375,000,000. Nearly $100,000,000 of that is distributed in payments to the boys and men who deliver the papers to your doorstep daily. About $550,000,000 is received by these newspapers in revenue for their advertising space from merchants, manufacturers, and people who render the many services that Americans regard as daily necessities," so states Arthur T. Robb, Editor of Editor and Publisher.

LEARNING THE WAYS OF DEMOCRACY—The Civic Forum for secondary-school students will hold its eighth annual meeting in Mitten Hall of Temple University, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on Saturday, January 18, 1941. Approximately 500 secondary-school students from eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and the eastern shore of Maryland will participate in the meeting. Sometime during the week of January 13, 1941, there will be a caucus of the majority and minority parties for both House and Senate to determine the bills which will appear before the Congress on Saturday, and to determine the attitude of each of the parties toward these bills.

On Saturday morning there will be a short session of the Senate during which the "Vice President" of the United States will be sworn into office. The Senate will then adjourn for the inauguration of the "President." After the "President's" inauguration ceremony is over, the two houses will reconvene in order to hear the "Message of the President." In the afternoon the houses will convene separately in order to discuss the bills determined in the caucuses.

NEGRO HISTORY WEEK—Literature for the sixteenth annual celebration of Negro History Week is now being distributed by the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History at 1538 Ninth Street, Northwest, Washington, D. C. The observance will come the week of February 9-16, 1941. The aim of the Negro History Week celebration is to inform people of what the Negro in the past and present has thought and felt, attempted and accomplished. The Association publishes The Negro History Bulletin, a 24-page monthly magazine which connects the past with the present and the history of the Negro in particular with that of the universe. Posters, circulars, and other materials giving direction and information to facilitate the observance are being distributed by the Association free of charge.

THE TEACHING POSSIBILITIES OF THE FILMS—Today hundreds of schools throughout the nation are using the motion picture as an instructional aid. A large number of films produced today are of value and interest to the teaching field. They take their place in everyday life as a powerful and constructive social force. Recognizing the stimulating effect that many of these films have to group discussion, a Group Discussion Guide is published by Educational and Recreational Guides, Inc., 1501 Broadway, New York City. This magazine is published monthly from September to June inclusive for $2 a year. It contains discussion guides to three current motion pictures for use in motion picture appreciation classes in the secondary school. It is also attractively illustrated with pictures from the motion pictures discussed in the issue.

THIS IS NOT TREASON—Have you read the article on this subject by Dr. W. G. Carr, secretary of the Educational Policies Commission of the National Education Association? If not, turn to page 237 of the November, 1940, issue of the Journal of the National Education Association. He says in part: "When we read these carelessly made charges of 'treason' in connection with the schools, let us remember that:

- "It is not 'treason' to teach that American ideals require a fair chance for everyone in terms of economic, social, and educational opportunity.
- "It is not 'treason' to teach that these ideals are not yet fully achieved and to stir the enthusiasm of youth to attain these ideals more fully.
- "It is not 'treason' to teach that the current developments in our economic life put great strain on the institutions of democracy and to summon up youthful vigilance and courage to meet the challenge.
- "It is not 'treason' to teach that many different races and peoples have made worth-while contribution to our American culture.
- "It is not 'treason' to teach the importance of the civil liberties, nor to give practice in the responsible use of these liberties in dealing with debatable public questions.
- "It is not 'treason' to teach that the United States can learn some useful lessons from the experience of other countries.
- "It is not 'treason' to teach important truths, even though those truths be distasteful to powerful interests in the community; not treason yet, not yet in the United States of America."

OCCUPATIONAL INFORMATION—Milliner and Window Display Worker are the titles of two occupational abstracts recently published in six-page leaflet form by Occupational Index, Inc., at New York University, 82 Washington Square East, New York City. Each leaflet summarizes briefly the nature of the work, abilities essential to success, training and education required, means of entering and advancing, earnings, number and geographic distribution of workers, probable future trends of employment, and advantages and disadvantages of the occupation, as they are stated in the best available studies of opportunities for employment in these fields. The leaflets are 15 cents each in quantities of ten or more; single copies 25 cents.

AIDS IN SELECTING A VOCATION—A manual explaining the Van Allyn technique for vocational selection has recently come off the press setting forth the theory, principles, and mechanics of a method in aiding vocational determination by matching the individual's capabilities with the requirements of the job. This publication can be secured for 50 cents from the National Institute of Vocational Research, Inc., Outpost Building, Los Angeles, California.

SHOULD MARRIED WOMEN WORK?—A study of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs shows that practically all working women—married, single, divorced, or widowed—are working only because their families need the money they earn. Most of the married women workers indicated that they would work only as long as it is necessary for their families' welfare. Little factual support is found to back the frequently heard charge that the employment of married women has intensified the unemployment problem by taking jobs away from men. Charges that the employment of married women results in neglected homes, smaller families, juvenile delinquency, and increased divorce rates are also held to be either false or unproved.

Despite this evidence, opposition to the employment of married women is found to be growing. Married women are most likely to find bars against them if they seek jobs as school teachers, or as office workers in public utilities, or large manufacturing concerns. Department stores are more liberal in their attitude toward married women employees. As a result of the growing opposition, bills have been introduced in the legislatures of twenty-six states in recent years which would limit the employment of married women. Only one of these passed and it was later repealed. Sixteen states legally safeguard the right of women to work, regardless of marriage, in their civil service codes and other laws affecting state employment. This is the forty-ninth of a series of factual, 10-cent pamphlets published by the Public Affairs Committee, and distributed by the Silver Burdett Company, New York City.

YOUTH SPEAKS FOR ITSELF—The American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education, Washington, D. C., is conducting a nationwide radio competition, in which youth is invited to tell about its "self-help" achievement. Youth groups may record their own programs, using the facilities of a local radio station, or they may interest a college or high-school radio workshop to use the work of their groups as material for recording. If there is no workshop in their community, the Commission will arrange for necessary recording facilities. Judges will consider the recordings not only on the basis of audience appeal, but also on the significance of the chosen project. The six winning recordings will be duplicated and distributed to hundreds of radio stations throughout the nation and the listening public will hear Youth tell its story in its own way. Recordings need not be submitted until February 17, 1941.

SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION DRAWS FIRE—The Research Division of the National Education Association has prepared the following statement:

"United States Senator Wagner started something in August when he introduced a bill (S. 4269) which proposed placing local and state employees under federal social security. His bill would have made public employees eligible for old-age and survivors' insurance benefits (but not unemployment insurance). Perhaps, out of every 5 local and state employees: 1 welcomed Senator Wagner's idea; 2 indicated confusion and skepticism; and 2 expressed violent disapproval. The last group included those who are now eligible to the benefits of various local and state systems—many of which offer disability insurance and ultimately higher retirement income than the federal plan promises. Many persons feared that federal social security would impose a new tax load upon local and state governments which would be harmful in various ways but particularly dangerous to the further financing of existing retirement plans. The storm of protest led Senator Wagner to explain that he meant no harm to existing systems and to prove his stand he introduced the following amendment to his bill on November 19:

Service performed in the employ of a state, or any political subdivision thereof, or any instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing which is wholly owned by one or more states or political subdivisions, or any instrumentality or authority created and existing by virtue of legislative acts of two or more states, where the employee performing such service is a beneficiary, or a contributing member, or has an unrealized interest in, or is designated as a future beneficiary by the rules of, any pension, relief, or retirement fund, established and maintained by authority of the constitution or statutes of a state, provision of a municipal charter, or ordinance of a municipality or other political subdivision. Provided that such persons as are separated from said service without pension, retirement or compensation award shall not thereafter be affected by the provisions of this paragraph.

"It is reported that Senator Wagner plans to rewrite his bill entirely and to introduce it in the next session of Congress after January 1, 1941. In the revised edition he may eliminate public employees from further consideration; or he may try to exempt members of existing systems but require social security in states where little or no protection exists; or he may provide for the exemption of existing systems and make the federal security plan optional in the 'have not' areas.

"The whole matter is further complicated by various proposals for nationwide pension plans, such as 'Ham and eggs,' Townsend, 'Mankind United,' and the so-called General Welfare Act. The last plan calls for a 2 per cent tax on all employed individuals which would provide everyone at age 60 with about $30 per month. For public employees this payment would be in addition to benefits promised under existing local and state systems. The advocates of all of these proposals are contending for public and Congressional support. The NEA Research Division is keeping in touch with developments and distributing information bulletins from time to time. The NEA National Council on Teacher Retirement has asked Senator Wagner not to imperil the status of existing teacher retirement systems."

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

AMERICAN VOCATIONAL ASSOCIATION, COMMITTEE ON RESEARCH. Occupational Adjustments of Vocational School Graduates. AVA Research Bulletin, No. 1. Washington, D. C.: the Association, 1940. 132 pages. 50 cents. A report of a study conducted by the association over a period of years. An attempt at finding out just what happens to vocational school graduates.

ANDERSON, H. D., AND DAVIDSON, P. E. Occupational Trends in the United States. Stanford University, California: Stanford University Press. 1940. 618 pages. $6.50. A study of occupational trends bringing together for the first time the reports for the occupational classes of the seven volumes of the Census of Occupations published from 1870 to 1930 together with certain estimates for 1940. The finding of investigations, of the technological and other influences at work in particular industries and professions, are related to the occupational trends in such a manner as to lead to judgments of the probable and immediate future of occupational groups in this country. These results should have considerable practical value for the study of social trends and should be of real value to guidance and curriculum workers throughout the United States as an aid to vocational guidance and vocational education. The study purports "to indicate how changing conditions in the life of the nation are reflected in and have an influence upon the number of gainful workers in particular occupations."

BILLETT, R. O. Fundamentals of Secondary-School Teaching. New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. 1940. 671 pages. $2.90. This book deals with the development of a general method of teaching in the secondary-school level. "The discussion of teaching goes beyond a mere description of teaching methods which 'work.' It draws on biology and psychology to show why certain methods work and why others do not; it considers what kinds of learning and hence of teaching our schools must provide if our belief in the possibility of maintaining a democratic society is to be justified; it illustrates effective teaching in various fields of study; and it presents an illuminating analysis of various current proposals for the improvement of classroom methods. The support which it gives to a plan of teaching from which non-essential features have been rigorously eliminated makes it of unusual value to anyone who is or intends to become a truly professional teacher." One of the Book-of-the-Quarter Club selections.

BRIGGS, T. H. Pragmatism and Pedagogy. New York: Macmillan Company. 1940. 124 pages. $1.25. The author stresses "the necessity for a well-understood philosophy based upon sociology, in order that educators and teachers may be continuously directed by clearly-viewed and validated ideas and the need of pragmatism as embracing the scientific attitude and procedure whereby educational research may be employed in re-organizing public education." He points out the failure to apply the findings of research to the improvement of the schools. He states, "The test of its (education) effectiveness lies not in the amount of loyalty to authoritarian or traditional standards, but in the change that it brings about in individual conduct and attitudes."

CLARKE, H. F., EDITOR. Economic Education. The Eleventh Yearbook of the National Council for the Social Studies. Washington, D. C.: The National Council for the Social Studies, 1201 Sixteenth Street, N. W. 1940. 170

pages. $2.00. The book is concerned not only with economics courses but also with the economic content of other branches of instruction. The first half of the volume deals with curriculum problems in economic education, and the second half considers methods and materials. In addition there is a chapter by E. L. Thorndike on the question, "Who Should Study Economics?" An extensive survey of the current status of economic instruction on the elementary, secondary, and junior college levels contains the research findings of four collaborators. Other chapters give specific suggestions for using motion pictures, graphs, charts, pamphlets, and field trips in economic education. The concluding chapter contains an annotated list of pamphlet materials for use in teaching economics.

COLLINS, L., AND BLANCHARD, V. A Modern Physical Education Program. New York: A. S. Barnes and Company. 1940. 350 pages. $2.00. The book is based on the premise that "the physical education program in the secondary school should place its emphasis upon the co-operative and co-educational relationships of young people as well as upon their needs as individuals." It includes objectives, activities, outcomes and measures of evaluation within each teaching unit. The material is organized around the school plant, that is, the gymnasium, the playground, the swimming pool and the health room. Much of the material was originally used in the Detroit Public Schools. Each activity is simply and fully described. The school that is developing, revising or redirecting its physical education program will find this book most helpful.

CONKLIN, AGNES M. Failures of Highly Intelligent Pupils. Contributions to Education, No. 792. New York: Teachers College, Columbia University. 1940. 250 pages. $2.65. A study of the behavior of an experimental, or unadjusted, group of thirty-two boys and thirteen girls compared with a controlled, or adjusted, group of twenty-seven boys and fifteen girls in a large New York City public secondary school together with a brief review of previous studies of this problem. An attempt to discover "why some youngsters are problems and others are not."

DOUGLAS, A. A. The American School System. New York: Farrar and Rinehart, Inc. 1940. 745 pages. $3. Revised Edition. An attempt has been made to describe the educational program as it now exists, to indicate the steps that are being taken to improve practice and to define the problems that stand in the way of advancement. While the book has been prepared primarily for undergraduate students in education, the person already on the firing line will gain much in reading it. The origin of our educational institutions and the source of traditions which exercise a powerful influence on theory as well as practice, financial support, administrative problems and other topics are given consideration by the author.

FRAZIER, E. F. Negro Youth at the Crossways. Washington, D. C.: The American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education. 1940. 301 pages. $2.25. A picture of the lives of colored youths in two representative cities (Washington, D. C., and Louisville, Kentucky) through interviews with many typical representatives of both sexes and all classes of young people and their parents. These studies were made from both the psychological and sociological viewpoints, with the accent on the latter. Questions of color line, of class distinction within the race, of neighbor relations, of education, of religion, and of getting a job are discussed.

GOLD, N. L., HOFFMAN, A. C. AND WAUGH, F. V. Economic Analysis of the Food Stamp Plan. Washington, D. C.: Supt. of Documents. 1940. 98 pages. 20 cents. A special report by the United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics and the Surplus Marketing Administration describing the plan, its theory, principles, costs and effect on retail trade, employment, diets, and the attitudes of its users.

- GOSSARD, A. P. Superior and Backward Children in Public Schools. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press. 1940. 122 pages. $2. This book describes the efforts of large cities to meet the problem of individual pupil differences over a period of seventy years. It is based on the annual school reports of ten representative cities and offers a background for evaluating proposed solutions to the problem. The author traces changes in administrative thought and school organization; he records the history of homogeneous ability grouping, describes the limited use of special classes for gifted pupils, the types of training for backward children, uses of pupil acceleration and retardation, conflicting beliefs about standards, and shifts in emphasis. Attention is also given to the use of plans for individual instruction, coaching, use of honors, remedial reading, improvements made in records, and the use of extra-curricular activities as a means of helping either superior or backward pupils.
- GRIFFIN, A. F. Freedom American Style. New York: Henry Holt Company. 1940. 184 pages. 80 cents. A re-appraisal of liberty as we have it in America. The author first analyzes the meaning of freedom, and then clarifies that meaning by sketching the history of freedom from the days of ancient Greece to the present crisis. He leaves chronological history to the textbooks and confines his efforts to making us think through the problems of freedom in order that, as present and future citizens, we may be better qualified to defend and preserve our freedom. It can be used as a supplement to any English or social-studies course, any course in history or civics, that is offered in the secondary school.
- HARTLEY, W. A., AND RENNER, G. T. Conservation and Citizenship. New York: D. C. Heath and Company. 1940. 367 pages. $1.60. A secondary-school text presenting both the physical and the social aspects of conservation containing integrated materials for history, civic education, economics and geography with numerous explanations drawn from elementary science. Unit titles are: What is Conservation; The United States as a Property; Our Forests—Mine or Crop?; Our Prodigal Waste of Soil; Water—Friend or Enemy?; Our Vanishing Wildlife; Squandering our Mineral Wealth; Human Resources; and American Discovers Planning.
- HARTLEY, W. H. Selected Films for American History and Problems. New York: Teachers College, Columbia University. 1940. 275 pages. $2.25. The first sixty-two pages are devoted to a discussion of how to evaluate films in the social-studies field, of the types of films available, such as Industrial, Government, Instructional, Documentary, Theatrical, and School-Made films. Such problems involved in the selection as size of film, whether to buy or rent, and how to get the film at the time desired, are discussed. The second part of the book is a catalogue of social studies films listed in alphabetical order according to the title under the topic which they best illustrate. A rather full annotation is given for each in addition to such information as length, silent or sound, cost, whether accompanied by a handbook, and grade adaptability.
- HAWLEY, GERTRUDE. An Anatomical Analysis of Sports. New York: A. S. Barnes and Company. 1940. 191 pages. $3.00. Prepared to fill the gap which exists between the fundamental sciences offered to professional physical education students and the sports technique or methods courses which they study. It attempts to show the parts which science of anatomy, physiology, physics and chemistry should play in physical education. Help is given to the coach or principal in detecting physical defects in pupils and in recommending desirable activities for these pupils. The posture aspect of sports is given especial attention as well as success in athletics consistent with safety to the body mechanism.
- HEATON, K. L., CAMP, W. G., AND DIEDRICH, P. B. Professional Education for Experienced Teachers. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press. 1940.

142 pages, planographed, cloth-bound. $1.50. Reviews the history of the workshop movement, describes in detail the basic principles and methods employed and raises certain questions regarding its possible significance for teacher education and for other fields of professional and graduate instruction. Of interest to all educators concerned with the improvement of instruction at any level.

HIGBEE, E. C. A First Course in the Study of Education. Chicago: Benj. H. Sanborn and Company. 1940. 392 pages. $2.40. A beginner's book, designed for freshman classes in teacher-training courses. It can also be used as a part of a school's "in-service" training program. It makes a broad survey of the history of the human race, the origins of education, the transition from formal education to systematized teaching, the place of education in a democracy, and the present form of our American system. Considerable space is devoted to a consideration of teaching as a profession. Thus as guidance information it weighs the advantages and disadvantages against those of other fields of endeavor.

Housing for Defense by the Housing Committee. New York: The Twentieth Century Fund, 710 West 42nd Street. 1940. 208 pages. $1.50. A survey of the role of housing in America's armament program, with recommendations for action. Such basic questions are discussed as: Who is to build the houses, government or private industry? How will they be financed? What is labor's part in the problem? What role should existing government agencies play? What is sound real-estate policy? How can we make the present emergency work toward a better housing policy for the future?

JONES, S. I. Mathematical Clubs and Recreations. Nashville, Tennessee: S. I. Jones Company, 1122 Belvidere Drive. 1940. 236 pages. $2.75. A companion volume to the author's other two publications: Mathematical Nuts and Mathematical Wrinkles. Contains numerous helps for clubs and recitation work together with numerous other recreations which the teacher can use with her pupils. Also offers suggestions as to what mathematical clubs can do in the way of keeping up interest and at the same time make a definite contribution to the mathematics instruction within the classroom.

KENNEDY, M. F. AND HARLOW, A. F. Schoolmaster of Yesterday. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company. 1940. 359 pages. $2.75. An intimate picture of a dynasty of school teachers—three generations—principally in the state of Indiana. Herein is shown the progress of education during a century, with a plea for teaching that places "a little more emphasis on morals—that of the building of character."

LAWSON, D. E. Curriculum Development in City-School Systems. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press. 1940. 238 pages. $2. Planographed. Traces the development of curriculum practices over a hundred-year period in ten leading city-school systems. The study reveals the changes that have gradually taken place in curriculum content and methods and provides a basis for predicting the emerging curriculum in the near future.

NELSON, J. Artytyping. New York: The Gregg Publishing Company. 1940. 96 pages. $1. A book in what appears to be a new development in typewriting. The author, who is the sponsor of the Annual Artytyping Contest, in which there were 2,000 entries in 1940, has designed a book to show anyone who can use a typewriter how to use it as a medium of artistic expression. Through instructions, exercises, and patterns, the procedures are given for reproducing on the typewriter portraits, landscapes, and drawings; how to make simple, intermediate, and advanced designs, cross-stitch, cut-out and multi-colored designs, letters of all sizes, letterheads, and artytyping for special occasions. This book and a typewriter could be the foundation of an interesting hobby.

PALMER, J. H. Junior Placement. U. S. Dept. of Labor, Children's Bureau Publication No. 256. Washington, D. C.: Government Printing Office. 1940. 133 pages. 15 cents. A survey of Junior-Placement offices in public employment centers and in public-school systems of the nation. A report on the specialized techniques which placement workers have developed in their work with junior applicants and an account of the extent to which specialized junior-placement services have been organized throughout the country, and of their programs in city and school systems of 10,000 or more population. An over-all picture of junior-placement work in the country at large.

Problems of Junior-Senior High School Pupils. The fourth yearbook of the Washington State Secondary-School Principals Association: Seattle, Washington. Frank Jones Clark, Broadway High School. 1940. 127 pages. $1, 10 copies or more, 80c each. Deals with the treatment of problems that have to do with junior and senior secondary-school pupils who have been interviewed, questioned or consulted in group discussions. Questions asked by these pupils about school administration, about the learning process, about relationship to others, about themselves, about jobs and vocational training, and about the philosophy of living, are discussed. In addition, a manual of 100 pages (80c each, 10 copies or more, 60c each) has been prepared from the yearbook for pupil use on a personal and informal basis.

TUNIS, J. R. Sport for the Fun of It. New York: A. S. Barnes and Company. 1940. 340 pages. $2.50. A handbook of information on twenty sports including the official rules. The philosophy that "the important thing is not necessarily to play well, not to win, not to be a champion, but to have fun and obtain the benefit of the game" permeates the entire book. Each sport discussed contains a history of its origin and background, a list of equipment needed, information about the required playing area, official rules and a bibliography. The games described are those more common types which can easily be played by every member of the family in his own home or back yard.

Pamphlets of the American Council of Education. 744 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C.

Films on War and American Policy by Blake Cochran. October, 1940. 63 pages. 50 cents. A report of the motion picture project being conducted by the Council, prepared with the hope that at least a partial understanding may be developed of the series of events that have led to present international wars, the infringement of human rights that has created fertile fields for the doctrines of totalitarianism, the irreconcilable differences between the principles of totalitarianism and of American democracy, and the need for national defense—military, economic, and moral. An attempt is made to describe briefly the significant parts of a number of films bearing on this subject, to point out the major issues or concepts which each film may be used to develop, and to indicate other subjects which should be studied in order to supplement the film presentation. Each film listed is described in detail, its educational value appraised, and the source from which it can be obtained indicated. All the films so described are available in 16-mm. sound prints.

A School Uses Motion Pictures by the teaching staff of Tower Hill School, Wilmington, Delaware. September, 1940. 118 pages. $1. A co-operative project of a number of individual schools in which they actually explored during the school year within their own classrooms the possible contributions of the film to the curriculum. The materials were carefully selected and previewed by the teachers and the children responses were observed and recorded. Individual chapters take up the usefulness of films for pupils, in the social studies, in science, and in auditorium programs. Similar reports are to appear from three other major demonstration centers of the motion picture project; University of Minnesota and the Denver and Santa Barbara public school centers. The Minnesota report treats with the use of films in the general college. The Denver report gives attention to the production of films dealing with the community activities engaged in by secondary-school teachers and pupils. The Santa Barbara reports on the use of films in their curriculum from grades one through twelve. This publication entitled Projecting Motion Pictures in The Classroom by F. W. Noel is now in press.

Social Competence and College Students by Esther Lloyd-Jones. September, 1940. 89 pages. 50 cents. While related to what social competence has to do with the responsibility that student personnel programs in colleges and universities bear for the development of social competent college graduates, there is much of value to the secondary-school principal in that he may realize the responsibility of his school for the development of social competence. Contains also a bibliography of over 150 books and magazine articles related to various aspects of this problem.

Pamphlets of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. 405 West 117th Street, New York City.

World on Wheels (automobiles), The Ties That Bind (clothing, textiles), Foreign Trade and the Pantry Shelf (food), Foreign Footprints in the Home (home, furnishings, art, music, literature), Machine Age in America (farm and office machinery, telephones, radio), and Our Neighbors—North and South (trade and cultural relations between United States, Canada, Central and South American countries). Each title 5c; 6 titles for 25c. Our United States in this Backward Moving World by Nicholas Murray Butler, Challenge to the Americas by John I. B. McCulloch, Hemisphere Solidarity by Alvin Hansen, and Problems of the Western World by Frederic W. Ganzert, free copies.
